The bank announced the Polish letter had been referred to its board of directors and that a reply would be made "in due course."

Poland's withdrawal from the two institutions marked the end of one more of the formal ties between western countries and the countries behind Russia's "iron curtain."

Czechoslovakia is the only other eastern European state which belongs to the fund and the bank.

Whitehall Notebook:

Woman M.P. Given Responsible Position by Labor Government

London March 16 (CP)— For the first time, a woman will sit in Whitehall with high responsibility for the administration of Scottish affairs.

Dark, diminutive Margaret Herbison is the first woman to be chosen as parliamentary secretary to the Scottish office. With the appointment she also ranks as No. 2 woman in the Labor government behind Dr. Edith Summerskill, the new minister of insurance.

Miss Herbison, a 42-year-old school teacher, has made striking progress since she first won a seat in the House of Commons five years ago. She was promoted unexpectedly to the Labor party's national executive, and was the government's only woman delegate to the council of Europe at Strasbourg last August.

She was also specially chosen to give one of Labor's five election broadcasts.

Night Owl

In the Feb. 23 general election, she retained her seat in Lanarkshire North by a 7,000 vote majority over Conservative and Liberal opponents. During her five years in Parliament she did not miss a single night sitting.

Once she stayed up three consecutive nights-through two all night sittings and an all night journey to Scotland.

In her job Miss Herbison will serve under Hector McNeil, former minister of state and prominent figure at United Nations meetings, who replaces Arthur Woodburn as Secretary of State for Scotland. Thomas Fraser remains as Scottish Under Secretary. The only junior minister to leave the Scottish office is J. J. Robertson.

There was considerable satisfaction at the appointment of McNeil expected to bring new drive and intuitive into the handling of Scottish affairs. The 46-year-old, broad shouldered former Glasgow newspaper man is considered to have done a good job for Britain in the U.N. council halls.

Sad Samaritan

One of the best election stories came from Ma). R. H. Turton, re-elected Conservative member for the North Yorkshire riding of Thirsk and Malton.

He said Sir Stafford Cripps went fishing, fell in and was saved by three small boys. The Chancellor of the Exchequer offered to give his rescuers anything they wanted.

The first asked for a bicycle; the second plumped for Sir Stafford's fishing rod; the third, brushing away tears, asked for a state funeral in Westminster Abbey. His reason:

"When I go home and tell my father I've saved the life of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, he'll kill me."

Foresees End of Economic Barriers To Higher Education in Next 50 Years

Toronto, March 16 (CP)— Disappearance of economic barriers to higher education within the next half-century is foreseen by the head of Canada's largest university.

Dr. Sidney E. Smith, president of the University of Toronto, says that within the next 50 years, any qualified high-school graduate will be able to complete a college course at government expense.

Discussing Canada's educational future, Dr.Smith predicts that the free tuition given former Second World War servicemen and women through the veterans affairs department will be extended to include any Canadian fulfilling the academic requirements

Drastic Weeding out

The student or his parents would still be responsible for his keep, although scholarships would be made available to those financially incapable of supporting themselves without undue hardship.

This would hot mean that universities would become havens for anyone wishing to spend a few idle years on a college campus. There would be a drastic weeding-out of undergraduates who proved "unfilled, indolent, or incompetent."

Dr. Smith dismisses as short-term problems which will be ironed out within a few years the existing overcrowding of elementary and secondary schools and the shortage of teachers, subjects which have occupied an Ontario Royal Commission for the last five years.

University of the Future

He foresees for the university of the future:

1. Increased efforts to fielp students in their selection of courses and in their choice of the vocation for which they are best suited.

2. An increasing demand for psychologists, asciologists and other students of the social sciences.

3. Comprehensive study of the arts and social sciences as a part of all professional courses.

4. Simplification of undergraduate courses in the professional faculties. Much detailed technical work will be left for post graduate study by students wishing to specialize in a chosen branch of their profession.

In line with these changes, Dr. Smith foresees a greater demand on the resources of primary and secondary schools. They would be required to lay the groundwork for broader university courses and to offer a better rounded education to those who do not proceed to a college degree.

While no ready-made solution exists for the scarcity of qualified teachers, he feels it will be achieved by an improvement in the financial and social status of the teaching profession.

"Of course, money won't solve it all, It is matter of recognition of the teacher's importance and significance in moulding the Canada of tomorrow."

Once the problems of overcrowded classrooms and shortage of leaders are solved, the schools will be able to concentrate on improving their curricula Where the vocational schools of today teach subjects designed for manual dexterity at the expense of all other fields, Dr. Smith feels every secondary-school student should be required to take an essential course of English and the social and natural sciences before graduation.

Swing Back to the Arts

With regard to the broadening of university courses, he sees the swing back to the arts as originating in the professional faculties themselves. In many schools in the United States and in some Canadian provinces, a three-year arts course now is required for admission to some professional courses.

"A doctor must have an appreciation of such subjects as economics and history to understand better the milieu in which his patient works, to attain a better balance within himself and better relations with his fellowmen."

The growing importance of the social sciences in university curricula reflected man's mounting uncertainty as he mastered the physical sciences. The discovery of such instruments of destruction as the atomic bomb pointed up the necessity of devising a way for him to live at peace with himself and with his neighbors.

Need Social Scientists

Dr. Smith saw an urgent need for rapid development of social scientists who could help solve man's problems before they destroy him.

"The social scientists will have to expand," or Frankenstein's monster will come down and destroy us."

Their task would be made easier by a better educated society. The free-tuition scheme would correct the situation of the last half-century in which universities recruited only from the homes of the moderately wealthy and well-to-do.

"Brains and character come out of all homes, irrespective of race, creed or economic qualifications," Dr. Smith concludes.

STUDENT SENTENCED

St. Catharines, March 16 — (CP) — Norton Smith, 17-year-old Grimsby high school student, was sentenced Wednesday to nine months for breaking into the home of Col. George Chetwynd Grimsby Beach on New Year's Eve, and wrecking the interior of the house.

Defence Counsel William Fullerton indicated an appeal would be launched. He pointed out that Smith had never been in trouble before and that the case had already taken 2½ months to dispose of.

Dude College

By Oren Arnold

"I have asked you to come in" impish, Dr. Woodrow Wesley York was saying, "because it is a faculty ruling that we make a first-week check of our students, Miss Bailey. Pueblo University always maintains close touch with its registrants, to assist them in every way. Have you found your courses satisfactory? What you hoped they might be?"

"Oh yes, Dr. York!"

Ronnie Bailey had a way of saying "oh yes" She emphasized the yes, made it sound of enthusiasm and gratitude so that it was distinctly complimentary. Dr. York looked up from his record book at her,

"Ah—quite so," he murmured then, inadequately: Miss Bailey always distracted him.

"And Dr. York, I'm sorry I got myself talked about. Am I to be punished? Daddy said I ought to be skinned for—"

"Miss Bailey, you are regarded as an adult here, which of course you are. Pueblo does not 'punish' you. Of course, certain disciplinary measures have to be invoked from time to time, but your—ah—explosion with the airplane and the Border Patrol was distinctly your own affair, and not reprehensible in the slightest, so far as I can see.

"Mr. Starr says that it demonstrates the need for additional autogiro planes in the border air service. With only three autogiros now, more should be added as rapidly as—"

"Do you like to fly, Dr. York?

"I beg pardon?" He looked astonished, "—myself?"

"Yes! Do you?"

"Why, Ah—no. That is, I have never once been in—"

"Goodness, Dr. York, you ought to be ashamed! This isn't the covered wagon era. This is 1940!"

"Quite so, Miss Bailey. But my scholastic pursuits—"

"Oh pre-e-e-ff!" she hissed at the idea, wrinkling her nore, then winked impersonally before she talked on. "Listen here, Dr. York the kids all say you are very human, really."

"They—they—how was that?" He put down his record book and frowned, incredulous, through his heavy-rimmed spectacles.

The elder students say you are a swell sort if you'd let you're self be, and you're not broken down in years Now listen—you're going flying with me—today!"

"Why, aw, Miss Bailey, I—"

"Come on! Classes are over for the day and it's still just 3:30. Come 'on, Dr. York! Don't be a droop!"

"A—droop." He echoed it. Droop. It was new in his vocabulary of recognized slang. Droop. Patently, one was not expected to be a droop, if one would exert proper influence over the students. And the university president had said that he, a very young Ph.D., should perhaps be closer to the student activities than any other faculty man. The thought of flying—and Miss Bailey's unmistakably charming manner and ah, bri; liph—

"Good; I knew you'd go. It's too lovely an afternoon to waste in an office anyway. Now my car is right outside and—"

She maneuvered him as she might have bossed her plane itself, guiding him and making him like it. Before the scholarly young gentleman realized it he was skimming over the road at 60, and when he became rational, he was skimming over New Mexico at 160. In object awe he looked down.

"Not over 4,000 feet," she answered his thoughts, shouting in his ear. "Like it?" Her grin was

"Oh, quite!"

"Good! We'll coast some."

Sliding, loafing along up high, motor idling, enabled them to talk more easily. Ronica noted that his somewhat pale indoorish skin had taken on a pink glow of exhilaration. Also, he had taken on his glasses off.

"It's surprising how much different you look," she said.

"I beg pardon?"

"Without your glasses, I mean. You look so much nicer. No, I don't mean that, Dr. York, I mean younger. Of course you look nice with them."

"I—ah, thank you, I—"

"What I mean is, you should get smaller frames, I think. These are too heavy. Do you have to wear them?"

"Only when I read, but one gets into a habit, and—"

"That's all of that, then. You start leaving them off."

He looked at her with raised eyebrows. Here was a girl, a student, actually ordering him! Giving him personal commands. It wasn't done in a university, he felt, but oddly, he liked it. It was distinctly pleasant, and it made sense.

Dr. Woodrow Wesley York blinked. He glanced at Ronica Bailey again and decided that yes, she was undoubtedly the prettiest of all the girls who had ever matriculated at Pueblo University. It made one wish that fate had not—

"There's a dance Saturday night," she suddenly announced.

"Quite so."

"Stop it!" she commanded gally "Quite so" is something to say when you turn 50 years, Dr. York. Can't you be yourself?"

He was shocked again, and looked it.

"I—I—you—"

She laughed happily, musically. "You're funny but I like you, really. I think you haven't been any too happy. Have you?"

"I—yes. That is—"

"Will you take me to the dance Saturday Dr. York?"

She might have shot a gun. Or power dived or looped a loop or, say, slapped him. No matter; it couldn't have astonished him as much as what she had said. His own voice, though, was paralyzed now.

"The kids say you have been girl shy," she went on, eyes dancing, "but the truth is, you're awfully good-looking and you're not as old as you think you are. I told some of the girls I bet I could break you out of your shell. Still he could say nothing.

"Mind if I drop the 'Doctor'? I mean outside the classroom, of course. How about 'Wesley?' What do your intimate friends call you?"

"W-Wes." He finally croaked that.

"Wes. It's okay—Wes! It's human. Here, you want to handle the controls some? Seriously, I'm not trying to flirt with you. I never flirt. I despise flirts, Wes. I'm just trying to stir you awake and I hope you don't get mad at me. Now grasp this levcr first, and—"

Get mad at her!

Get mad at Ronica Bailey, Poor Wes York, at once miserable and exalted, had no words despite his broad vocabulary. Get mad at her? Never! The girl spoke truth! He knew it, and in him was an almost frantic crying out of gladness,a welcoming of her frank comradeship; this vivacious, impulsive girl had suddenly brought life to him.

He swallowed hard, thrust his shoulders back determinedly and turned to her. Pink though he was, he spoke with conviction now.

"Miss Bailey—that is, Ronica—I am both literally and figuratively up in the lcouds, but I certainly shall take you to the dance! I—in fact, I was about to ask you myself!"

He wondered what gave him the temerity to utter that last falsehood. But no matter; he felt a powerful new stumulant streaming through his veins.

"I'll sing a song-g-g-g—"

Dr. Woodrow Wesley York Ph. D., stopped short.

He caught a glimpse of himself in his long bathroom mirror. His muscular body was pink from bathing, but his face was pink from embarrassment. Astonishingly, he had actually been singing a snatch of a current campus song!

It was something he hadn't done in—well, ever in his memory. Back in his own college days he had been extremely busy working to pay expenses, studying to make his grades, and practicing to make the varsity swimming team.

He had been deeply, interested in his chosen science of archaeology—the mysteries of people who lived centuries ago, long forgotten races and clans. He had loved even then to explore their ancient cliff ruins and pueblos in the Southwest. Never had he found time to do any social frivoling. Certainly he had rarely been one to sing a love song, notwithstanding his undisputed ability in the church choir.

Still, why not?

He snapped his paw tight. He had, this day, gone airplane riding for the very first time. He had gone with America's best-known girl, Ronica Bailey, wealthy socialite renowned coast to coast. Moreover—and this thought really appalled him—he actually had a date with Ronica Bailey to take her to a dance. The first date with a girl in more than five years.

Dr. York resumed punishing himself with his rough towel. He rubbed excecdingly hard and — resumed singing!

A fellow can sing if he wants to, can't he? A fellow's bathroom and home are his own. Just as are his theories. Dr. York reasoned as he glared at his reflection, silently defying it to make any denial. Then he roared out louder than before, a love song in a powerful baritone.

Andre Girardeau discovered, through the tactful help of his dude ranch hostess, that the big Pueblo University dance on Saturday night was not exclusive—that students in that was open to "the right people" of the little community as well. The village was closely knit to the university in both business and social life. Mr. Girardeau could feel himself quite welcome there just by purchasing tickets in advance.

He bought two tickets in the Varsity Pharmacy and went at once to the drugstore phone booth The Rocking R. Ranch answered but somebody with a Mexican dialect informed him that Miss Ronica was not at home.

He couldn't understand well; somewhat out of patience he asked for somebody who spoke English. That brought Thomas U. Bailey himself to the telephone. Andre, was in high, pleased to have this chance at speaking with Ronica's dad.

"So good to talk with you again, Mr. Bailey," he spoke heartily. "This is Andre Girardeau."

Lacelle of Ottawa Tops Fine Boxing Card Sponsored By Sports Staff of Trenton Station

Hard-punching Ron Lacelle, promising young Ottawa fighter who was extended to the limit by clever Joey Peters of the Diamond Athletic Club, Toronto, before he got the official nod in the main bout of an entertaining boxing card at the Trenton RCAF Station sports hangar Wednesday night.

Upwards of 1,400 fans from all parts of the district saw one of the best cards ever staged by Flight Lieutenant Harry Hinton, Flight Sergeant Rod Purdon and Sergeant 'Mike' Kelley, sports committee of the station. Outstanding boxers from the three services from Kingston, Picton, Ottawa, Montreal, Trenton and other points put on a show that produced plenty of excitement and thrills throughout.

The main bout was easily the pick of the card crop. Lacelle, who is said to hold a decision over Trenton's Alan Slater proved to be a clever hard-hitting youngster with plenty of science and fire in both fists. But he met a foeman worthy of his steel in Peters. The Toronto kid, who took severe punishment from the opening round, battled gamely throughout the entire five rounds and threw punch for punch against his more experienced opponent, especially in the last round. Weggy on his feet from the solid rights and uppercuts of Lacelle, Peters rallied and smashed head and body punches that decisively slowed up the aggressive Lacelle in the last round. It was fast and furious fighting all the way through and a bout that climaxed a fine evening's entertainment.

Semi-final Bull Bout

The semi-final bout between Bob Malouf, Grenadier Guards, Montreal and Ralph Millan, Royal Montreal Regiment proved a dull slow affair with Millan losing by the only knockout of the card early in the fourth of a five-round affair. Neither fighter appeared to extend himself and the large crowd appeared satisfied when it was over.

Darky Mohammed, a Montreal fighter proved one of the cleverest boxers on the card. In fine condition and superbly trained, Mohammed, not only won his bout from Gunner Bobby Smith, Picton who put up a plucky fight, but also the Jack Dempsey special prize of a pair of autographed boxing gloves for the serviceman staging the best exhibition of the evening.

Gunner Cleary, RCA, Picton, who fought a slugging battle with LAC Pat Fraser, Trenton RCAF in a return bout, won the Dempsey gloves after being adjudged the gamest loser of the evening.

The other bouts were well fought with only one knockout being registered. "Rocky" Lucas, Belleville youngster, showed plenty of class in his bout with Air Cadet Doug Hinton of Trenton.

Between the semi-final and final bouts Group Captain C. C. Dunlop, commanding officer of the station presented winners and losers with trophies and cups.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEO. H. CARVER, Sports Editor

"Sweet Auburn" the famous village of desertion fame, will have nothing on the city community of Stirling come Friday night.

For with the onsurging juvenile "C" hockey squad, headed by Coach "Doc" Ralph Vandervoort, and Manager D. Patterson, in a figurative Pied Piper role, the sturdy burghers and their ladies, not to mention the old folks and the teen-agers will converge on this city in an exodus reminiscent of that well-known March 14, 1930 when the loyal villagers with those of Campbellford, left hearth and home, cows and horses, unpaid bills and income tax returns and packed the arena on the occasion of the famous playoff series of that year.

Yup, there'll be a cavalcade of loyal Stirlingites mount the Oak Hills Friday evening en route to the city where they will see their hockey prides and joy battle in the first game of the Ontario Minor Hockey Association Juvenile "C" finals against the Kincardine crew of moppets, the pride of Western Ontario.

They'll arrive here in lassitly new automobiles, jalopies' of more or less ancient vintage, and rumor has it that a few surreys minus the fringe on the top, will be pressed into service to take care of the overflow. Just what they will do with the Dobbins is a question. Hay 'n' oats are mighty scarce commodities in these here parts these days.

They tell me Reeve Harold Wells, has chartered a charabane, Ex-Reeve Bill West will send his dairy wagons into action if the need arises. Business men of all transportation whether it be a 1951 limousine or Shanks Mare, the loyal populace of sunny Stirling will be here en masse Friday evening.

So if any of you city slickers are seated near a sturdy burgher who sizes voice in sketching out a pretty gal or matron, whose tonsilar efforts climb in a shrilling crescendo, don't think they're refugees from a mid-summer's eve party and parcel of the Moral Support Club of Stirling whose vociferous thunder, it is hoped, will spark their grand little hockey team to victory-producing efforts. After all, they've got a hockey team to yell for. That's a danged sight more than we've in the city can say.

Yup, gentle readers and kiddie, Friday night is Stirling's night to howl. And if you've been inside the Stirling arena lately when the hockey team is playing, you'll readily understand the fans of the village are blessed with lusty lungs. There'll be standing room for their every inch in Memorial Arena and ye olde welkin should ring when the Stirling hockey "choir" is given full rein.

And what a line-up. Dang it, they've plenty to be proud of. They've got a fast-skating, hard-checking bevy of youthful guys who have fought their way, and not an easy one, to a spot where the ultimate goal is in sight. They have turned back the challenge of the best Belleville could offer, and added a couple of western teams for good measure. Friday they meet the final acid test. And all Eastern Ontario will be rooting for them. If they win the coveted crown, it will be the first time a minor-hockey championship has journeyed this far east of Toronto. And just in passing, any support from this city will not be unwelcome. The Stirling kids are from Hastings County, they represent Hastings County, but this city and the eastern part of the province. So whatsay we get out and cote for the youngsters.

The game itself should be one of the best. Whether the quality of the Kincardine kids is not known, suffice it to say they will be taught to battle, every inch of the way, by the sturdy mine country heroes of Lake Huron. No team that reaches the finals series in any phase of sport can be regarded as pushovers. They've reached the top-dog through sheer ability. So Friday night's battle between these starry squads should be a spectacle that any hockey fan should want to see.

"HE SLUD INTO SECOND"

Ole Dizzy Dean, fog-ball artist of the Ozarks and baseball broadcaster extraordinary, has accepted a job with the Yankees of the American League. He will appear on a pre-television program, act as official court jester of the Yankee empire, represent the club as a speaker at dinners, etc.

Dean's projection into the Metropolitan airwave rat race is causing consternation among his contemporaries. Few of them can catch the lob, of subduing that Dizzy does on the language and none can compare with him as a natural wit and homespun philosopher. Of course, his greatest advantage is his baseball background. Dizzy may not be able to dress up his gab in fancy words, but he will know what he's talking about. So will his audience, once they get accustomed to his peculiar past tenses such as "he slud into second" and "they drug him to the bench" and so on. What the "runners returned to their respectable bases," it will be a welcome relief from the bombast and the clichés of some of his contemporaries, with whom originality is the original sin. I don't refer to Mel, Red or the other top-notchers who know the score.

Dizzy doesn't second-guess the opposing managers when he is handling a game, nor does he try to calm off a ball game as a classic. Out in St. Louis, he used to yawn over the mike when the action grew dull and remark: "Folks, you don't know how smart you were, stayin' home today. This is the worst sandlot game I ever looked at."

Dizzy is one of nature's unspoiled children whose pattern of conduct can never be predicted but who makes more sense than a lot of educated folk. Casey Stengel tells a classic story about his ex-television commentator, bird dog and chief bottle washer. One day when Stengel was manager of the Braves and the Cards were in town, he was holding a pre-game house meeting with the players before the game when Dizzy burst in on the conference.

"Got a piece of court plaster?" asked Dean.

"No, we haven't," said the latter scram," replied Casey, "this is a private meeting."

Then, to the astonishment of the Boston players, he told each of them what type of ball they would pitch to him. Next he instructed Casey how to have his pitcher throw to the Cardinals' batters.

When the game got underway, the Braves' batsmen thought Dizzy would cross them up by throwing them pitches they weren't expecting instead of those he said he would use. By the end of the fifth inning when the Boston club had made only one hit, they knew the fabulous hurler was sticking exactly to his "free-swinging program" as he described it. Though the Braves' batsmen knew exactly what was coming they almost set up a record for futility that afternoon. To add insult to injury, Dizzy would make a gesture in Stengel's direction everytime a Boston batter was retired to indicate that he had thrown the exact type of pitch he promised he would. Dizzy won the game easily, allowing only two or three hits, and I'll bet the record books that the Braves pitcher benefitted by the correct appraisal of the Cardinals' hitting weaknesses that Dean had obligingly given him before the game got so he, himself, would be under double jeopardy.

That wasn't the most amazingly eccentric feat Dizzy ever performed, however. At one period, he was on the outs with his catcher, Ernie Orsatti, the second game of an entire game against the Braves without a signal from or a word of conversation with the estranged catcher. That afternoon, Dizzy allowed three hits and the Cards won 1-0. He threw only three curve balls in nine innings, depending almost entirely on his fog ball and his change-up.

Hooper started on the mound for the A's in the game won by the Mackmen 4-1.

R.C.A.F. Flyers Beat Hull Volants

Ottawa, March 16 (CP)—Coach Arnie Morrison's RCAF Flyers pushed the throttle open next Wednesday night to overwhelm Hull Volants 7-2 and deadlock the Eastern Canada Senior Hockey League semi-finals before 3,100 fans.

The winner will meet Calumets in the finals.

Snapping out of a slump that hit the club in the last month of the regular league schedule and toppled them from first to third place in the standings, the airmen took just eight seconds to gain a lead they never surrendered. They led 4-0 at the end of the first period and added two more without a reply in the second before coasting to victory in the third.

Veteran wingman Patsy Guzzo drove in two goals for Flyers, while Johnny Sully, Hugh Campbell, Billy Watson, Ab Renaud and Orval Costello tallied singletons. Hull markmen were Gilles Genereux and Georges Potvin.

Smiths Falls, March 16 (CP)—Inkerman Rockets rolled to a convincing 5-3 decision over Ottawa St. Patrick's College Wednesday night to take over a one-game lead in the Ottawa district Junior 'A' Hockey Association finals.

The victory before 2,500 fans gave Rockets a 2-1 lead in games in the best-of-seven series with the fourth game scheduled for Ottawa Saturday and the fifth here Monday night.

Four of Inkerman's first five goals came with the Ottawa students playing two-handed because of penalties. Rockets, however, held a wide margin in play throughout the contest.

Wings Clinch Championship Of NHL by Beating Canadiens, Maple Leafs Shut out by Hawks

By HARRY ECCLES
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

After leading the pack all season, the Detroit Red Wings have clinched the championship of the National Hockey League.

Wings made sure of the league title by beating Montreal Canadiens 4-1 Wednesday night while Chicago Black Hawks shut out Toronto Maple Leafs 4-0. Boston Bruins walloped New York Rangers 4-1 to keep alive their slim mathematical hope of a Stanley Cup playoff berth.

Detroit now has 82 points and second-place Toronto has 70, each team having five games left. Montreal in third place has 67 and New York 65.

Rangers aren't yet wholly in command of the fourth and last play-off spot. But it's pretty solid; they'll have to win all five remaining games while Boston win five to give Bruins the edge.

McNeil Had Bad Time

Canadiens' rookie goalie Gerry McNeil, after averaging a goal a game in five previous starts while replacing the injured Bill Durnan, had a bad time in what is probably his last fill-in game. The high-powered Detroit No. 1 line of Sid Abel, Howe and Ted Lindsay figured on every Detroit goal, with four assists to Abel, three to Lindsay and Howe's 30th goal of the season.

Couch Dick Irvin of the Canadiens was on the bench, despite reports before the game that he was confined to his hotel room by illness.

At Chicago a crowd of 11,770 saw the last-place Hawks whitewash the Leafs, three-time Stanley Cup winners. It was Frank Brimsek's fifth shut-out while Turk Broda of Toronto was beaten twice by veteran Doug Bentley and once each by Bert Olmstead and Metro Prystai. Bentley brought his lifetime goal total to 204.

Madison Square Garden had only 7,412 in attendance when Bruins hung onto their fading play-off hopes with the victory over Rangers. Willie Bettio, Johnny Peirson, Ed Kryzanowski and Bod Pollo did the scoring honors, with Pentti Lund spoiling a shutout for Boston's goalie Jack Gelineau.

Quebec Aces In Semi-Finals

Quebec, March 15 (CP)—Quebec Aces Wednesday night trounced Valleyfield Braves 5-2 to win a Quebec Senior Hockey League best-of-five quarter-final series 3-2.

Quebec now will go against Ottawa Senators in a best-of-five semi-final series.

Wingers Martial Perneau, Dick Gamble and Julian Smith sparked the Quebec attack with a pair of counters apiece while other tallies were handled by Paul Mundrick and Roland (Rossy) Rossignol.

Ted Lindsay, Sid Abel and Gordie Howe increased their lead as one-two-three men in the National Hockey League Wednesday night to break away from the pack altogether and assure Detroit Red Wings of at least three scoring titles.

Lindsay garnered three assists to boost his total to a pace-setting 69, which, added to his 23 goals, give him a total of 72 points. Abel, Red Wings team captain, also picked up three assists.

Hornets Battle To Maintain Playoff Spot

(By The Canadian Press)

The St. Louis Flyers-Pittsburgh Hornets battle for the only remaining playoff position in the American Hockey League is going right down to the wire.

The Flyers took over third-place in the league's western section Wednesday night with a 4-3 victory over Hershey Bears while the Hornets dropped a 4-2 decision to Cleveland Barons. St. Louis now has a one-point edge over the Hornets and both squads have only two games left to play.

Cliff Simpson fired two of the St. Louis goals while Adam Brown and Billy McComb picked up one each. Harry Lumley marksmen were Gordie Bruce, Zeilio Toppazzini, and Johnny Mahaffy.

Meanwhile, Cincinnati Mohawks, hopelessly entrenched in the league cellar, went on a scoring spree and established a modern record as they rallied four goals in 50 seconds in a 5-2 rout of New Haven Ramblers.

The Mohawks were holding a slim 1-0 lead halfway through the second period on a goal by Jacques Locas when they suddenly broke loose.

Wally Stefaniw scored at 11:02 Ivan Irwin repeated at 11:26 and 18 seconds later it was Bobby Frampton. Jimmie Moore finished the spree at 11:52.

Don Newcombe May Win Thirty Games This Year

(By The Canadian Press)

Don Newcombe has yet to pitch a full season in the majors but already they're picking the big Negro righthander to become the first since Dizzy Dean to win 30 games in the season.

Winning 30 is a stupendous feat, but the mere fact that players and writers are willing to speculate on Newcombe doing it is a tribute to the equipment and mound wizardry of the Brooklyn Dodger ace. Despite inexperience, Newcombe hung up a 17-8 record in 1949. He did not start a major game until May 22 after he was brought up from Montreal Royals.

Cary Middlecoff, who gave up dentistry for golf, Wednesday started his pro-amateur 72 to win top money in both the medal play and pro-amateur competition in the $10,000 Seminole golf tournament at Palm Beach, Fla.

The Detroit Beach, Fla., professional, last year's United States Open champion, won $1,500 for his aggregate of 207 in the 54-hole medal competition among 60 leading pros. He won another $1,250 for his tie in the 36-hole pro-amateur contest.

Ralph Greenleaf, 13 times world's pocket billiard champion, died Wednesday at Philadelphia at the age of 50.

It now appears that singer Bing Crosby won't make a trip to England and Scotland this spring, after all. Larry Crosby, his brother, Wednesday said: "I think Bing has called off the trip entirely." The American crooner-sportsman underwent an appendectomy Monday and is still in hospital. Crosby had hoped to play in the British amateur golf championship in May.

Freddie Mills, former world light heavyweight champion, has been granted a manager's licence by the British Boxing Board of Control. Mills quit fighting after Joey Maxim took his world title from him Jan. 23.

Manuel Ortiz, world bantamweight champion, Wednesday announced definitely at Los Angeles that he will defend title in a 15-round match with the British Empire champion, Vic Toweel, in Johannesburg, South Africa. The little Mexican kingpin said formal papers are being drawn up, with May 13 the tentative date for the fight.

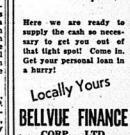
J. D. Nash led his London, Ont., rink to victory Wednesday night at Toronto in the final of the Ontario Colts Curling competition, winning the H. J. Sims trophy over Stan Chevesley of Orillia.

Nova Scotia curlers, representing Halifax and Bridgewater clubs, lost a single match out of eight at Charlottetown, P.E.I. Wednesday night in winning the Maritime junior curling championship.

Don Gallinger To Attend Camp Of Phillies

Kitchener, March 16 (CP) — Don Gallinger, playing manager of the Waterloo Tigers senior baseball team for the last two seasons, announced Wednesday he will leave March 29 for Seaford, Pa., to attend Philadelphia Phillies training camp.

Gallinger said he will try for an outfield berth and if he is offered a contract, will probably turn professional, but only if he can join a club in "A" classification of the Phillies farm chain.



Gallinger was offered a contract to play "A" ball in 1949 after he worked out two weeks at Baton with both the Braves of the National League and the Red Sox of the American League.

He rejected the offer at that time in preference for a hockey career with Boston Bruins. He now is under suspension by the N.H.L. over gambling charges.

PLAYER LOSES EYE

The optic was removed in an operation Wednesday. His eye was injured last year when he played at Toledo. The operation was found necessary when his vision began to trouble him recently.

Mercurys Rule Heavy Favorites To Take Title

By MICHAEL O'MARA
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 16 — (CP) — Edmonton Mercurys, with two one-sided victories over weak opposition under their belts, carry Canada's colors into the final round-robin of the World Hockey championships tomorrow.

After defeating Switzerland 13-2 and Belgium 33-0, the Mercurys rule heavy favorites to take the world title back to the Dominion after a year's absence. The 1949 champion Czechoslovakian team was not allowed by the Czech government to come here to defend its laurels.

Friday's opening game pits Canada against Switzerland, easy victims of the high-flying Mercurys in the first round. Saturday Canada plays the United States; Monday, Norway and Tuesday, Britain.

The Mercurys appear to have little to fear from the United States team, one of the weakest squads ever to carry the Stars and Stripes into a world tournament. Norway, probably the least impressive of the six survivors, should be easy pickings.

The surprising British team, unscored on in two games while chalking up 9-0 and 2-0 victories over France and Norway respectively, might be tough to take Tuesday.

Made up almost entirely of Scottish - born players, the British squad features a hard - hitting defence of the Syme brothers, Tuck and Jack.

"The draw's fine," he said, "I should keep it exciting right down to the very end. That's the way we like it."

In yesterday's 23-0 romp against the outclassed Belgians, the Mercurys fired 114 shots at goalie Jacques Heyien, while Wilbur Delaney at the other end was tested only 14 times.

Every Canadian player except goalie Delaney figures in the scoring summary. Leading the massacre with four goals apiece were Leo Lucchini, Hassie Young, Harry Allen, Ab Newsome and Billie Dawe.

It was February, 1946. For the first time since the war's beginning, snowshoe clubs of Canada and the U.S. were meeting. Three thousand strong, they gathered at Lewiston, Maine, for the greatest congress in their history.

The stellar event was the traditional 10-mile marathon. In bright capes and blanket coats, Canadians and Americans swept across the course. Ten times were tallied. Canadians had taken the first three places in the marathon—and had shattered world records in the mile and two-mile events!

Traditionally, Canadians are skilled with snowshoes. Sportsmanship and keen spirit keep us first in the field. Together, sportsmanship and keen spirit help you, too. They keep your opportunities for work and play in Canada ... unlimited.

Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, March 16 — (AP) — It wasn't movie offers that convinced Mercedes McCambridge to settle in Hollywood. It was acquiring a husband, Fletcher Markle of Toronto.

Miss McCambridge is the heavy favorite to snag an Oscar for her hard-hitten performance in "All The Kings Men." Despite the acclaim she won in her first screen role, the radio actress was indifferent about settling here.

"I had never thought about Hollywood before," she said. "It was like another world. I managed to keep busy—and happy working in New York. The idea of invading Hollywood never occured to me."

Then Marriage

That was before she and radio-producer Markle tripped off to Las Vegas to tie the knot.

"I'm married now," she said. "And a wife has to go where her husband goes." Markle now works in Hollywood commuting here after years with the CBC.

Too Long?

Miss McCambridge has refused editors to make her change her name.

"A lot of people have told me it's too long and I should change it," she remarked. "I won't. It's my own name and I like it."

They had better let her have her way. She might want to adopt her full handle—Calotta Mercedes Agnes McCambridge Fifield Markle. It's Mer-Say-Deez, by the way, with accent on the Say. Friends just call her Mercy.

"I can't understand," she remarked, "why people would change a perfectly beautiful name into something short and cute that sounds completely false. I like long names that sound unusual and have a ripple.

"And I don't know why Lizabeth Scott wanted to change her name from Emma Matzo, I think that's a fascinating name."

PICTON

Tennyson Club Hears Paper on Poet-Laureate

Picton—G. H. Gundy, librarian at Queen's University, gave an outstanding paper on Alfred, Lord Tennyson, at the meeting of Picton Tennyson Club, Tuesday night. This was a critical appreciation of England's poet — laureate of the Victorian era, and the speaker outlined Tennyson's life history and the development of his literary career and talents, as they appeared in several volumes of verse. Mr. Gundy read selections to illustrate his observations. Introduced by club president, Glen Clarke, the speaker was thanked by Mrs. S. Owen.

Dr. J. H. Walmsley, for the nominating committee, introduced the following slate of officers for 1950, the 49th season: president, Malcolm Love; vice presidents, Sidney Owen, Gordon Whattam, secretary, Dr. W. B. Lane, treasurer, E. S. Theaker; literary committee, Dr. W. B. Lane, Mrs. L. B. Calnan, Miss Kathleen Jordon, Glen Clarke; music committee, Mrs. S. Theaker, A. A. Bewie, Mrs. M. V. Doey, Miss E. Reid; hostess committee, Mrs. F. W. Runnells, Mrs. C. Spencer.

Hostesses at the social hour were Mrs. E. S. Theaker, Miss Florence Barber, Mrs. A. E. McCutcheon, Mrs. A. F. Brown, Mrs. S. Owen and Miss K. Jordon.

ALL MANNER OF YELPS

Toronto, March 16 — (CP) — This call came through to the telephone operator: "Get firemen, police and a doctor!" The housewife hung up and the operator called each department in turn. When they arrived at the woman's house all manner of yelps greeted them from the basement. A five-year-old Greyhound had his ear caught in the gears of a washing machine — and had short-circuited the works.

AT THE BELLE — Happy Harmony Trio. Burl Ives, popular singer of American ballads, is heard in his role of village blacksmith and friend of Bobby Driscoll and Luana Patten in Walt Disney's combination live action and cartoon feature in color by Technicolor, "So Dear to My Heart," in which they share featured honors with Harry Carey and Beulah Bondi.

Rules are not meant to be broken. They are meant to tell what is most often correct. If you break a rule it is not because it was meant to be. It was because you take the chance.

In a flight tournament, a pair could not have won their match unless they bid and made a slam. So, they broke all the rules out of the window when the deal that came up was this:

	NORTH
	♥A 8 5
	♦K 2
	♣A K J 8 4
WEST		EAST
♠K 5 2		♠3
♥J 9 6 3		♥Q 10 7 4
♦A 8 5 3		♦Q 10 9 4 2
♣9 5		♣10 7 6
	SOUTH
	♠J 10 8 7 6 4
	♥K 2

South became the declarer at a small slam contract of six spades. To reach such a contract some of the rules of bidding had to be broken; that is, stretched. The values for slam bid were not there.

North counts seven tricks. They are six high cards (aces, kings, queens) and a short card in diamonds. South has a count of four; two highs, a three in hearts and a short in diamonds.

With a total count of 11 in the pair, they are short one trick of the 12 needed for a small slam. Rule bidding, therefore, would hold them to a final bid of not more than five.

Give east the west diamond ace and five is all it will make with a diamond lead. Exchange the west trumps with east trump and a contract of five is all it will make.

Thus, rule bidding would be correct if you consider what would happen most often. Knowing which, a skillful pair will still take a chance if the situation is desperate. But they know it is a chance.

The opening lead was diamond ace, from west. Thereafter, south got in and finessed west out of his trump king. The rest came in easily with solid clubs and the other tops.

In bridge, even a million-to-one chance it not prohibitive odds. Why? There are 635,013,596,-600 different hands. At a million-to-one shot you still have 635,-012 chances. Be good, dice.

AT THE BELLE

Long Awaited "Samson and Delilah" Starring Lamarr, Mature, Due Monday

Based on the Bible story "Samson and Delilah" follows in the wake of such illustrious DeMille spectacles as "The Ten Commandments" "King of Kings" "The Sign of the Cross," and more recently "Unconquered."

In the planning stage since 1935 when the first screen play was written the actual shooting of the film took only 66 days once production got under way. This was no small feat inasmuch as there were huge crowds of extras in many scenes, and a great number of technical problems to solve.

The destruction of the Philistine Temple, for example, was a sequence that took eight days to film. And other key scenes in the picture—Samson's bare-handed fight with a lion, his assault on 1,000 Philistine soldiers, a fearful wedding feast brawl—also took more than a week to finish. . .

Casting of the title roles lasted through more than a year of exhaustive tests, Mature had little competition, but Miss Lamarr won over such beauties as Vivien Leigh, Jennifer Jones, Paulette Goddard, Ava Gardner, Gene Tierney and Joan Fontaine.

Continuous shows will be presented on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 1.30 p.m.

SCOTT'S SCRAP BOOK By R. J. SCOTT

Little Benny's Note Book

I was watching the living room clock getting later and wishing I didn't have to take a bath before I went to bed, and I said, pop, heck, ma, if I took my bath tomorrow nite instead of tonite it would do me more good, because I tomorrow nite I'll need one still more than I do now.

Being a good argument but pop didn't say anything and neither did ma, and I said, More people are suppose to catch a cold taking baths than any other day.

That's a relief to know, pop said. The most aggervating part of a cold is never knowing where you cawt it, he said, and ma said, Yes, it's imbarrising, like being stopped by somebody on the street and not remembering where you met them. It'll be a grate satisfaction to be able to catch colds to the bathroom, she said.

Me thinking, Heck, And pritty soon I said, There's no special reason to feel safe in a bath tub I heard of a man that got drowned in a buckit of water, just because he happened to have his face in it. I said.

By gollies there are certain places it's a good thing to keep your face out of, pop said. Some others I can mention are airplane propellers, shooting gallerier, and the lower end of a bowling alley, he said, and ma said, It's especially dangerous for certain boys to put their facer in a freshly made cake.

Meening me and what hapened the other day after I sampled the icing on the chocklit layer cake she made for the bridge ladies.

The result being I ended the subject by taking my bath, still feeling sgreat it.

The importance of calfhood vaccination and its success in assisting to eliminate contagious abortion in cattle was stressed to members of the Quinte District Cattle Breeding Association at their annual meeting held Wednesday at the collegiate auditorium.

Guest speaker for the afternoon was Dr. A. L. McNab, principal of the Ontario Veterinary College at Guelph, who told of the work being done at the college towards the elimination of Bang's disease, and of other tests relative to breeding.

Dr. McNab stated that of the three different types of abortion in cattle contagious abortion was the most prevalent. Calfhood vaccination at from six to nine months was doing much toward the elimination of this disease with calves so vaccinated running no chance of contaminating cattle.

Build Up Strong Herd

Calfhood vaccination also provided the opportunity of farmers building up a herd resistant to abortion. Dr. McNab urged that the calfhood vaccination program become province-wide which in turn would permit a test and removal policy on a township basis.

The speaker said that artificial breeding units were reasonably safe from the danger of transmitting vaginitis infection as the germs are quickly destroyed. Dr. McNab also told of blood tests being undertaken at the college with the view of establishing a positive method of cattle parentage identification.

William Watson, representative of the Ontario Livestock Branch said "the three important factors in cattle raising were breeding, feeding and weeding. This along with disease control was sound policy."

The importance of using only proven sires, whether or not they were used through an artificial breeding unit was stressed. This was even more important in the case of a breeding unit because here a poor bull could do more harm.

But, he warned, proven sires were getting scarcer and he suggested it would possibly be necessary for breeding units to commence raising their own bulls to assure a good supply. Such bulls could be proven on farms before being used through the breeding unit.

Although he admitted it was against the general policy of artificial units, he thought there might be merit in giving selective service from bulls with especially high records to farmers with top producing cows. In this manner increased numbers of high class bulls may be raised for use by breeding units.

Feeding was equally as important as breeding. The importance of well fed calves was stressed by Mr. Watson who also urged increased herd testing as the basic policy in any herd improvement program. It was a sad thing that such a small percentage of the cows in the province were on test he said.

Outline Operations

Officials of the Quinte District Breeding Association gave an account of the operation of the unit during the past year, while Dr. J. M. McLean, manager and chief technician, said he was proud of the unit. It was becoming more efficient and he had no hesitation in recommending its services to farmers, and members. Association president Fred H. Hubbs of Bloomfield, presided over the meeting.

Directors elected are the officers of the local units comprising the association. The directors will elect their own officers. Following are the directors.

Napanee — R. H. Paddle, E. H. Sproule; Consecon — J. L. Broad, J. B. Elliott; Tweed — A. F. Foster, K. Caskey; Stirling — G. Sutherland, H. Detlor; Campbellford — E. L. Anderson, R. P. AT THE POLLS

Looking fit and vigorous, Soviet Premier Josef Stalin is shown casting his ballot in the first voting district of the Lenin election district of Moscow, for N. A. Bulganin and S. I. Vavilov, in Russia's one-party election. Bulganin, who is vice-chairman of the council of ministers, and Vavilov, who is president of the academy of sciences of Russia, were both nominees for the posts of deputy to the supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. With only one party on the slate, all Communist candidates were elected. — Central Press Canadian.

SHANNONVILLE

Inspector MacLean Addresses Teachers Assoc. on Reports

Shannonville—The Tyendinaga Teachers Association held their March meeting on Monday at the Eastern Indian School, with a full attendance. Since the program was under the direction of the teachers who taught in the Indian schools, Indian matters predominated. The president, Mrs. Ross Shetler, presided.

Mr. Cassey, the superintendent informed the meeting that Tyendinaga Reservation was the second largest reservation in Canada, the largest being that of the Six Nations reserve at Brantford. He also outlined his duties as regards to sale of land, settling of disputes, education and avoiding unpleasant publicity.

Mrs. Hill displayed the communion set of which she is the custodian. Three pieces of this communion set were sent over by Queen Anne of England. One piece was borrowed and taken back to England. During the trip the goblet was lost. It has since been replaced by another item, but the hall mark is decidedly different than the original Queen Anne pieces.

Mrs. Rathbun the former teacher of the Eastern School and the Rev. Savary, the Anglican rector of the reserve, also spoke briefly.

Inspector Macklem spoke to the teachers as regards to reports and other matters.

A most interesting and successful teachers' meeting was closed with a bountiful repast.

The next meeting will be held at Mrs. Lally's School on the first Monday in May, as Easter holidays will conflict with the April meeting.

OPERATING LOTTERY

St. Catharines, Ont., Mtrch 16 (CP)—A Montreal man who said he began selling punch boards to make some money to get married on, was sentenced to a month in jail and fined $230 on two charges of operating an illegal lottery with punch boards. Alphonse Leveille, 40, a former Montreal laundry worker, was picked up by police on his first visit to St. Catharines.

RAWDON

Rawdon—A fair crowd attended the National Film pictures at Mount Pleasant Church hall on Tuesday evening. The slides were on "Smuggling in the Dope;" "Who will teach Your Child;" "American Tourists Views of Prince Edward Island" and of "Saguenay Quebec."

Three of the pupils from the Allan School, George Scott, Doreen Bailey and Lola McConnell read their compositions. They were written after the films had been shown at the Allan school.

A short club meeting was held and refreshments were served.

Wm. Bendix Signs Seven-Year Contract for Less Than Million

Hollywood, March 16—(AP)—Hint of the bitter days which have fallen on this fabulous city was seen today in the new contract signed by a ranking movie star. William Bendix, long a top box-office draw, Tuesday signed a seven-year contract with R.K.O. which pays him less than $1,000,000. He will make 14 pictures at the rate of two a year.

That is only $70,000 a picture. A few years ago studios were paying more than that for mere feature players. Even writers got that much. Some stars were making $500,000 or more a picture.

Then along came the British ban on American movies with the resultant loss of foreign revenue; and, finally, television. Studios have been laying off employees by the hundreds. The number of players under contract has dropped from 742 in 1947 to 315 this year.

R.K.O. in a statement announcing the contract said it "may well set the pattern for future negotiations in Hollywood."

POSTWAR STAFF REDUCTIONS LARGELY COMPLETED

Toronto, March 16 — (CP) — Citizenship Minister Harris said Tuesday that postwar reductions in the civil service staff had been largely completed.

Addressing the Toronto Liberal Business Men's Club, he said the federal government would likely retain its 120,000 employees "unless sthe people of Canada were prepared to go without much of their present governmental services."

Heat-Resistant Cat to Undergo An Experiment

Minerva, Ohio, March 16—(AP) A "string" correspondent flashed this message to the Canton repository Wednesday:

"Historic cat tale experiment launched. Cat, steak and thermometer in kiln as of 1145 a.m. "Kiln to open early Friday morning. Will have photog on scene."

Thus began a test to determine if the tale about "Miracle," the cat, is true.

Could Miracle really have stayed in an inferno-like brick kiln for 36 hours without being cooked? The temperatures reached 900 degrees.

The Dean of Ohio State University's Veterinary College said it was impossible. So Mrs. Twila Carman, the correspondent who first told the world about Miracle's heat-resistant cat, undertook to prove her story.

She wrapped a sirloin steak in a second-hand sealskin hat. This synthetic cat she placed in the kiln, with two thermometers.

The kiln will be heated to 900 degrees.

If the synthetic cat is not a well-done steak when the kiln is re-opened Friday, correspondent Carman will feel vindicated. So will kiln superintendent Joe Bucola, who told the story, and Dr. William Orr, the veterinarian who backed him up.

Playful Teacher

Eufala, Okla., March 16 — (AP) — Charges that a male teacher popped the elastic of girl pupils' underclothes has divided patrons of the two-room Cathey School near here.

The teacher, W. E. Dickey, has been charged by county-attorney Mimmy Whiteley with "outraging public decency." He pleaded inadcent in county court and is free on $1,000 bond pending jury trial.

Whiteley says he has statements from girls between 11 and 16 years that the teacher touched their legs and snapped their elastic.

Gordon Proposes Revamping C.N.R. Capital Structure

Recommendations Would Help to Bring Surpluses

Ottawa, March 17 — (CP) — Proposals for revamping the Canadian National Railways' capital structure, aimed at putting the company in a position to break even each year, were placed by the C.N.R. today before the Royal Commission on Transportation.

The government-owned company also recommended that it be allowed to use any annual surpluses, which now go to the federal treasury, to set up a fund that would be used, among other things, to hold down freight rates.

Donald Gordon, new head of the C.N.R., told the commission its proposals should enable the company, on the average, to meet its fixed charges. The National line, except for the war years, has had a succession of deficits. The last one reported was of $33,000,000 in 1948.

Toronto March 17 (CP)—Education Minister Porter announcement changes in school curricula "harpooned" some of the work of the Hope Commission on education, C.E. Millard (CCF-York West) said Thursday in the Ontario Legislature.

Mr. Millard was the last opposition Speaker as the Throne-Speech debate ended with a 49-to-34 vote in favor of the government. The 90-member legislature then killed by 49-to-34 vote amendments to the motion for an address in reply to the Throne Speech and passed the motion by the same vote. An amendment by A. A. MacLeod, leader of the two-man Labor Progressive group was defeated 61-to-22. Only the 21-member CCF group supported the Labor Progressives. The Liberals, who have 14 supporters, voted for the CCF amendment. Six members were not in their seats for the voting.

Other speakers yesterday were Mr. Porter and C. C. Calder (Liberal-London).

Mr. Millard said a committee composed partly of Mr. Porter's own staff had been appointed to recommend to the commission desirable changes in curricula. Mr. Porter had announced sweeping changes in the education system in a speech that fell at St. Thomas without consulting the committee, Mr. Millard said.

State Lottery Proposed by Quebec Bill

Quebec, March 17 (CP)—Premier Duplessis today told the Legislature the government bill to establish a state lottery will be introduced in a few days.

Notice of the bill appeared on the order paper under the title "an act to assist education and health."

The premier said the bill would authorize creation of a committee with power to determine conditions under which the lottery would be operated. The premier did not say what form the lottery would take.

The premier first announced his intention last fall of introducing legislation to provide for a state lottery in Quebec.

The premier said the lottery would be operated "in conformity with the laws of the province." He did not elaborate on this point.

It was believed in informed circles, however, that the authority to create a lottery would be dependent on an amendment to the Criminal Code of Canada which bans lotteries.

DREW ASKS PROBE INTO REPORT ON SCIENTIST'S TRIP

Dr. Infeld Says Press Story 'Utterly Untrue'

Ottawa, March 17— (CP)— George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, asked the government in the Commons Thursday to look into a report that Dr. Leopold Infeld, a teacher of mathematics at the University of Toronto, plans to go to communist-dominated Poland to teach in universities there.

He addressed his request to no particular minister and government members made no immediate reply.

Quotes Catholic Weekly

Mr. Drew quoted from a story in the current issue of the Jesuit, Catholic weekly, which reported Dr. Infeld as announcing that he would go to Warsaw to teach and to make plans for scientific educational exchange and co-operation with the Polish government.

He said the article had this quotation:

". . . he is thoroughly familiar with the theory and much of the practical application of atomic energy."

Mr. Drew said he had evidence that Dr. Infeld had predicted in 1946 that Russia would have the atomic bomb in three years time. That was a "strangely accurate forecast." He also said that Dr. Infeld, a refugee from Poland, taught at Warsaw and Krakow before.

"I think all of us are fully aware that in the communist states education is something that conforms to more than academic standards," Mr. Drew said. "Those who are engaged as teachers . . . in their universities are certainly under certain limitations as to the nature of qualifications that do not relate to their academic standing alone."

Says Drew Misled

In Toronto Dr. Infeld said Thursday he was sorry to learn that Mr. Drew "was misled on the article in the Universe."

Dr. Infeld told The Canadian Press that the report he plans to return to the Soviet Union would be "utterly untrue." Furthermore, the said, he has never been an atomic scientist and never has had anything to do with atomic research. His field is the field of fundamental physics, or the relation of relativity theory. "I have no secrets, everything in my brain can be known to the public," he said.

BAFFLE BANK CLERKS

Toronto, March 17 — (CP) — A bank official said Thursday that customers who didn't know Toronto recently look so good they even baffled bank clerks. The spokesman, who didn't identify himself, said that in three cases tellers were found to have taken in the counterfeits and unknowingly paid them out to customers.

Food Rushed in for 40 Families, Snowbound, Living on Potatoes, Water

St. Sauveur, N.B., March 17— (CP)— The RCMP today rushed three cases of milk and a few loaves of bread—all they could find in a hurry—to this backwoods parish where some 40 families say they have been living on potatoes and water for several weeks. The families were cut off when roads into the area were blocked by snow.

Constable J. E. Roy arrived here with meagre food supplies. He told The Canadian Press some of the people claimed they had nothing to eat but potatoes and water for several weeks and the children had had "had a drop of milk" for two or three weeks.

Meanwhile, the Red Cross began gathering food supplies for the settlement, some 20 miles east of Bathurst and seven miles south of the shore of Bay Chaleur.

First words of the settlers' plight reached the outside world after a minor hunger riot Wednesday.

Rev. Henri Levesque, parish priest of St. Sauveur, said the situation was serious.

In Fredericton, however, Industry Minister J. A. Doucet, member of the New Brunswick legislature for Pacquetville in which the parish is located, said the situation is not very serious. He said stores have a fair stock of food when the roads were blocked. The roads had now been cleared and relief measures are studying the situation.

Some reports said the hungry people had threatened to ransack Mr. Doucet's general store at Pacquetville to get food, after search of food.

In Moncton, A. Stuart Gillis, provincial Red Cross chairman, said a truck load of food will leave Bathurst today for the area.

Father Levesque said some 1,000 persons lived in the district.

Most of them were lumbermen who had been employed all winter. Family allowance cheques were their only source of cash income. Practically none of them were eligible for unemployment insurance.

Edmonton Team Wins First Round In Final Series

By MICHAEL O'MARA
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 17 — (CP) — Canada's Edmonton Mercurys today won their first game in the final round of the World Amateur Hockey Tournament by easily defeating Switzerland 11-1.

The Mercurys, which downed Switzerland 13-2 in entering the round-robin playoffs undefeated, appeared to lack the fire of recent games. For the first 30 minutes of play the Swiss held the score to reasonable proportions.

The game opened with a 15-minute delay. After a scramble in front of the Swiss goalie Stan Bannigner was floored with a severe cut across the cheek bone and his eye narrled off.

Mercurys' centre, Hastie Young, drew a five-minute penalty for high sticking. From the press box it appeared the injury was accidental.

M. Riesen donned the Swiss pads in place of Bannigner.

However, Bannigner returned to the ice with three stitches in his face at the start of the second period.

BALD EAGLE QUITE TAME

Owen Sound, March 17.—(CP)—Has any one lost a bald eagle recently? Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Waite of nearby Kemble saw one Thursday, but it was not allowed them to walk right up to it. The bird was perched on a roadside tree. "We looked the bird over and it looked us over, too, with no sign of fear," Mrs. Waite said.

SKY'S THE LIMIT

Toronto, March 17—(CP)—The Toronto Transportation Commission's operations manager said Thursday night that "the sky's the limit" on T.T.C. fares should 10 or more of 12 suburbs amalgamate with Toronto.

W. E. P. Duncan told the engineering institute the lowest fare that could be expected would be a straight 10-cent fare within the next three years.

TWO OPPOSITION NON-CONFIDENCE MOTIONS BEATEN

Month-Long Throne Speech Debate Ends

Ottawa, March 17, (CP)—Two opposition non-confidence motions in the government were rejected in the Commons Thursday night. Members then ended a month-long debate by adopting an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Division bells rang three times and each time the government, with its overwhelming majority, won hands down. On some of the votes it was supported by opposition groups.

Partial list of the Commons:

In the first division, members voted 117 to 21 against a Social Credit motion of non-confidence in the government. The motion criticized the government for "failure" to establish a balanced economy wherein Canadians would have the purchasing power to consume all the Canadian production, if they so desired.

The motion drew support from P. E. Blackmore (Lethbridge); Dr. R. Foulin (Ind—Beauce) and all CCF members except Ross Thatcher (CCF—Moose J. w). who voted with the Liberals and Progressive Conservatives.

The second division was called on a Progressive Conservative motion of non-confidence, defeated by a vote of 166 to 30.

Province to Levy Personal Income Tax of Five Per Cent To be Taken from Fed. Tax

Budget Increases Race Track Tax; $1,004,000 Surplus

Toronto, March 17 — (CP) — Ontario turned to the personal income tax field today for new revenue to help ease the mounting burden of its public debt — at no extra cost to its taxpayers.

In his budget address to the Ontario legislature, Premier Frost announced plans to take up the federal government on a two-year-old offer to let the province levy a personal income tax of five per cent on the federal tax. The taxpayer could deduct his provincial tax from his federal payment.

Mr. Frost said he hopes to have the federal government collect the whole tax and pay Ontario its five per cent — estimated at $13,000,000 to $16,000,000 a year and earmarked for sinking funds for debt retirement.

Delivering his eighth budget address as provincial treasurer, Mr. Frost announced two other taxation changes:

1. Reduction in the 35-per-cent amusement tax for hospital purposes to 15 per cent with complete exemption for children where the admission is 15 cents or less.

2. An increase to 12½ per cent from 10 per cent in the tax on race track pari-mutuel betting. To this he linked establishment of a racing commission to control race tracks and an effort to have the federal government amend the Criminal Code to make it mandatory to use pari-mutuel machines to handle betting on harness racing where the bookmaking type of betting now applies.

Mr. Frost—in his 13,000-word report—estimated the unburdened cycle of surpluses on current account since he first became treasurer in 1943 will be $20,626,000 ending March 31, but estimated over expenditures, after providing for a payment of $20,626,000 into capital account sinking funds.

The surplus compares with one of $1,132,000 last year and a forecast for the present fiscal year of $157,547. He estimated a net margin of $166,000 in the next fiscal year, ending March 31, 1951.

Revenue and expenditure far outrun his estimates of a year ago when the budget was framed. Revenue amounted to $232,593,000 and expenditure to $231,589,000—both new highs for the province. Next year he anticipates revenue of $238,260,780 and costs of $238,-094,750.

Family of Six Burned to Death At Port Huron

Port Huron, Mich., March 17—(AP) — A fierce fire that destroyed four homes struck here in a matter of minutes early today claimed the lives of a family of six.

The fire that swept the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Chase is believed to have started in the living room of the home where Mr. and Mrs. Chase had been playing cards with Chase's brother Frank and his wife until 4 a.m.

Undersheriff A. J. Foster identified the dead as Chase, 34, his wife, Phyllis, 32, an expectant mother; and their four children—Judith, 8; Nancy, 4, Ralph, 3, and Rebecca, 2.

Foster was noticed at 6 a. m. by a passer-by who said he saw a "sheet of flame" roar out from the home on Wilbur Lane in Port Huron township. He tried to get in but was driven back by the intense heat.

Foster said the body of the father was found in the kitchen and the other members of the family in their bedrooms.

Cat-in-the-Kiln Test Proves Calico Cat Was Fire-Resistant

Minerva, O., March 17—(AP)—Minerva's celebrated cat-in-the-kiln test was completed today. The experimenters said they found:

That real Miracle, the calico cat, really was fire-resistant;

That she could have lived for 36 hours in a brick kiln, where the temperatures reached 900 degrees.

"Now", exclaimed Joe Bucci, superintendent of the brick plant, "maybe they'll believe we're not a bunch of liars."

Mrs. Stella Carman, who conducted the test, said:

"I think that shows that the cat could have lived."

Dean Walter R. Krill of Ohio State University's Veterinary College had expressed doubt that Miracle lived in the kiln 36 hours. But Dr. William Orr, a Minerva veterinarian, supported the story.

This prefabricated cat was placed in the kiln Wednesday. Again the temperature was raised to 900 degrees. This morning, 36 hours later, the kiln was reopened.

One of the first things—steak and fur—was burned to a crisp. But most of the package was in good condition. The fur was soft and the steak was tender and juicy.

The thermometer wrapped in the package registered 100 degrees. And this was hours after the kiln's heat had been turned off.

"I think that shows that the cat could have lived."

Dean Walter R. Krill of Ohio State University's Veterinary College had expressed doubt that Miracle lived in the kiln 36 hours. But Dr. William Orr, a Minerva veterinarian, supported the story.

POLICE OFFICERS WILL BE CALLED IN WINDSOR PROBE

Windsor, March 17 — (CP) — Police officers are slated to testify today in the Windsor police commission's inquiry into "allegations of corruption" in law enforcement here.

At least two Windsor policemen were mentioned in testimony Thursday on the probe's opening as Crown Attorney A. Douglas Bell, K.C., of Chatham, special counsel, called Alexander Bootlegger, Joseph Asef, with more than two hours of questioning about his alleged customers' list.

Asef was brought under escort from the county jail where he is serving a six month sentence after conviction on a charge of keeping liquor for sale. County Magistrate A. A. Banrahan, who sentenced Asef in a written judgment suggesting police laxity, was the only other witness heard Thursday.

Mayor Arthur J. Reaume, one of the three police commission members conducting the inquiry, told Mr. Banrahan from every address on the Asef list after which the notation "C.O.P." appeared now is being investigated.

The list contained no names; only addresses.

American Buyers After Pure Bred Cattle at Sales

Auction sales in the Bay of Quinte district where registered cattle are advertised to be sold are attracting large numbers of American cattle buyers or their representatives. In many instances from registered cattle are offered three or four American buyers are on hand.

Many American buyers have Canadian representatives and these men have instructions to bid high prices for registered cattle. Cattle for shipment across the border must pass strict tests before being admitted to the American side and can command much higher prices than beef sold in Canada.

Some farmers are of the opinion that since the duty on exporting to the United States is keeping beef scarce in Canada and is consequently helping to keep beef prices high.

House Hit Second Time by Car

Henry Hatfield, 32 Hillcrest Avenue, doesn't go for the old adage that lightning does not strike twice in the same place.

And that goes double if the lightning happens to take the form of a motorist which has gone out of control. And to prove his hunch that out-of-control motor cars can and do strike the same place twice Mr. Hatfield points to the corner of his residence on Hillcrest Avenue.

About a year ago a motorist was turning the corner from Alexander Avenue when his car hopped the curb and crashed into the side of the Hatfield home. At that time a hole was punched in the side of the house and the unlucky motorist paid.

Yesterday it happened again! Clayton J. West, 27 Cannilton Rd., was driving west on Alexander Street, when in attempting to turn onto Hillcrest his car went out of control and skidded into the corner of the Hatfield home.

It will cost about $100 to repair the front of the car. But at that the car got off lucky. Damages to the house were estimated at $400.

More tha none Son of Erin might have been disappointed this morning.

As a service to their customers one telegraph company published a book which included information under the heading: Greetings at Flat Rates".

Messages are stereotype, but provide necessary wordage for most occasions. Here are a few special charge category.

A person wishing to remember, Christmas, New Year's, Mother's Day, a birth, a wedding or wishing congratulations simply picks a suitable message from the book and gives it to the sender by mentioning the number. It all seems so easy excepting for one thing.

A close scrutiny of the service revealed that there are no standard greetings printed for St. Patrick's Day. Perhaps, the wire company figured it was not necessary.

All of the dozen messages dispatched to various parts of Canada from one local telegraph office have been given a

Shelves Proposal To End War State With Germany

By EDWARD E. BOMAR

Washington, March 17 (AP)— The western Allies have decided to shelve for the time being a proposal to end the formal state of war with Germany.

Diplomatic officials said today that the British, the United States and France have agreed that termination action would threaten a tangle of legal complications which the three occupation powers are unprepared to tackle now.

Accordingly, a meeting of legal experts at London has been called off. Further active consideration of the idea has been postponed until a forthcoming spring meeting of the big three western foreign ministers.

State and justice department officials here decided that a declaration bombing the war would mean that the United States congress would have to concur and this could open a Pandora's mess of domestic legislation.

More than 200 American statutes are still based on the continued existence of a state of war and will be automatically repealed when congress votes that the conflict is legally at an end.

Officials here say British and French problems are somewhat what less difficult, but there was general agreement that further study is necessary.

Politically, officials believe the western Germans would be displeased, and the effect of a possible separate peace treaty between Russia and Eastern Germany would be offset in part if the western Allies declared Germans to be no longer enemies.

However, if the American position is reported to be that the practical advantages are promised by such action.

Keeping western occupation troops in Germany would not be affected by a repeal of the state of war, American authorities decided.

Mattress Fire Kills 6 Prisoners In Spray, N. Carolina, Jail

Spray, N.C., March 17 (AP)— Six prisoners—five negroes and a white—perished in the Spray Jail today after a mattress caught fire. Three were white and three Negroes.

The fire was found by desk Sgt. P. L. McBride when he went to the second floor of the city hall building to lock up another prisoner at 6:30 a.m.

All of the six had been charged with public drunkenness.

Police said there was a possibility that one of the six—all faced trial this morning — had deliberately set the fire. The jail was only slightly damaged.

The victims were Lucille Wimbush, 30; Junior Yarborough, 22; and Marion Morrison, 35; all white; and Harvey Cole, 34; Joe W. Willis, 21 and Bonie Martin, 34; Negroes.

They apparently were asleep when the fire started, and were suffocated.

Hydro Electric Development Most Remarkable Sign Of Ontario's Growth Says Premier

Toronto, March 17, (CP)—The development of hydro-electric power is one of the most remarkable signs of Ontario's growth in the first half of the 20th century which has seen the province's population trebled to more than 4,500,000, Premier Frost said today in his budget address.

Since the turn of the century Ontario's power needs have doubled but hydro production has increased 20-fold, he said.

The Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, established in 1906 began operations in 1909.. In 1900 only a little more than 50,000 horsepower was developed. It used the province's abundant water power to build 2,000,000 h.p.—full horsepower for every man, woman and child.

The first concrete highway in Ontario was built between Toronto and Hamilton between 1915 and 1917 at a cost of $30,000. Today Ontario had 73,000 miles of highway of which 8,000 miles were surfaced. It has developed a voluminous material and 50,000 miles of trunked steel wire. Motor vehicle registrations grew from less than 200 in 1900 to more than 1,500,000 today.

Railway Assists

The Ontario Northland Railway which facilitated development of the province's resources was first started in 1903. It was in the first year of construction of the railway that rich deposits of silver and cobalt were found in the Nipissing district. Gold was discovered at Porcupine in 1909 and at Kirkland Lake in 1911.

"The railway has materially facilitated the expansion of the pulp and paper industry," the Premier said. "This industry has served as a counter pay load to the inbound traffic to the mines. The Ontario Northland Railway has not only created these industries but has promoted farming, established communities, and has pushed back the northern frontier."

Tobacco Crop Increased

The half-century change in farming was marked by a 30-fold increase in the tobacco crop to more than 10,000,000 pounds. New crops such as soya beans and sugar beets were added. Butter production increased 10-fold.

In 1900 there were 10 small pulp mills whose production would not have met the needs of three of 1950's large newspapers. The capacity of the pulp and paper industry at present, an investment in Ontario of more than $300,000,000.

Mineral production in 1949 was worth $315,000,000, 34 times greater than in 1900. Mining industries in Ontario directly employ about 33,000 persons.

In the first year of the century Ontario manufacturers produced materials valued at $138,000,000 into products worth $242,000,000. In 1949 the gross value of manufactured products was more than $6,000,000,000 to stabilizing the rate of structure. He said such a fund would grow to the extent to which it was built up today and would be necessary of applying for general freight-rate increases.

GORDON PROPOSES

(In the last two years, the railways have had three rate increases, adding up to 40 per cent over rates in effect before 1948.)

Minister of Resources Lesage Mr. Gordon's three basic proposal today was largely a matter of book-keeping as between the accounts of the railway and the federal treasury. At present, the government collects interest on the C.N.R. obligations it takes any surplus left over and covers any deficit. It finances capital outlays for the C.N.R. with these amounts being added to the company's annual debt charges.

Object of Mr. Gordon's proposals is to put the C.N.R. on its own feet, free it of its cumbersome debt burden by scaling down its interest-bearing debt to a more normal level and show a profit on its books when operations justify.

Bergman's Hubby Prepares Fight To Hold Daughter

Los Angeles, March 17—(AP)— Ingrid Bergman was ready to come back to the United States, and her husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom, was preparing to meet her head on in the fight for custody of their 12-year-old daughter, Pia.

If it happens, it would be the first face-to-face showdown between the couple since the actress went to Stromboli, fell in love with Roberto Rossellini, and had a child—admittedly—by him.

The stage for a possible tense courtroom drama was set Thursday as:

1. Miss Bergman's lawyer, Gregson Bautzer, said the actress will be a witness when the case comes to trial and "is determined to make the fight of her life for Pia."

2. Dr. Lindstrom, the quiet brain surgeon, finally came out swinging with an announcement, through counsel, that he will argue that Ingrid is unfit to have custody of the child.

The Swedish doctor also will charge desertion as grounds for a divorce here.

Will Give Accounting

Pacht said Dr. Lindstrom is ready to give a complete accounting of conservatorship as requested in his wife's suit and will demand "an equitable distribution among husband and wife and the daughter."

But the actress, a Swedish citizen, is faced with the possibility of having to battle it re-entry the United States. In Washington, Senator C. Johnson (Dem. Colo) put a letter in the senate record saying neither Miss Bergman or Rossellini should be given ticket to enter under immigration laws which forbid entry of aliens declared guilty of moral turpitude.

Johnson, head of the Senate Commerce Committee, mentioned columnist's report that Miss Bergman and Rossellini planned to make a movie titled "Joan of Arc" but hinted federal communication censorship or congressional action might be necessary.

DOUBLE PENALTIES FOR DRIVING OFFENCES

Announcement that the penalties under the Ontario Highway Traffic Act are to be increased on conviction for drunken driving where the offence results in an accident in which any person is injured or property damage is caused, has no doubt been welcomed by the very great majority of motorists and the rest of the public as a means of forcing it upon the offenders' minds that offences contrary to the Act must cease.

It is proposed that the penalty on any person convicted of a driving offence of this kind be doubled, so, that the term during which his licence and permit may be suspended will be doubled.

The motoring public today is so large that it requires every driver to be in full control of himself and of the vehicle he is driving at all times so that accidents may not happen. Otherwise there cannot but be accidents of the most serious and lamentable character.

Especially can this be true in the case of a driver in the state known as "drunken."

It has been shown year after year in reports of the traffic toll that the human factor is the chief cause of accidents and that rarely is it the machine. Therefore it behooves every driver to be in full possession of his faculties so that no accident may happen with him.

Under the proposed amendment offenders who are caught and convicted will at least be off the roads and highways for the period of time during which they are under suspension as to the use of their car and permit to drive.

Any changes which will help to reduce the danger and the number of accidents and injury and damage on the highways will be welcomed by the public. The proposed changes should be a help in keeping down accidents.

DUTCH AS IMMIGRANTS

Prince Bernhardt of The Netherlands recently referred to the crowded condition of Holland and brought up the question of the possibility of 10,000 Dutch immigrants entering the Dominion of Canada each year.

The people of Holland have long held the highest reputation for those who come from The Netherlands have made good in the lands of their adoption. Persons of Dutch descent living in North America are very numerous and are among the best citizens of the United States and Canada.

Their industry and independence, their thrift and their facility in adapting themselves to lands to which they migrate are characteristics of a people who in all their long history have been vigorous, independent and loyal to the highest motives.

Wherever the Dutch settle they add to the strength of the nation which they adopt as their country. They easily assimilated and associate with the people of the lands to which they go to establish new homes. They quickly become part of the national life to which they make their contribution. That is no mean endorsement of the life of the land of their choice.

STALIN AT THE POLLS

New York Times points to the fact that Russian newspapers recently published pictures of Premier Stalin casting his ballot and notes that the Times correspondent in Moscow drew attention to the fact that in the picture in the Times Stalin looks in the pink of health. The Russian censor had permitted the correspondent, Mr. Salisbury, to observe that while Stalin is "under doctors' orders not to make long sea or air trips" nevertheless Stalin himself "has made it most plain repeatedly that when any question rises between sparing himself physically and carrying out his duty by his country he has put duty ahead of personal considerations."

The newspaper accordingly asks, "Does this approved observation, together with the mute evidence of the picture itself, mean that Stalin is now ready for a trip abroad? A journey to some new conference? A voyage that would reflect a shift in Soviet foreign policy? So vast is the Russian enigma, so much guessing does it compel us to do that every word of the dispatch will be read twice; for some there may even be speculation as to whether any significance attaches to the choice of 'lilacs and zinnias' (which surround the ballot box shown in the photograph.)

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

St. Patrick was a Catholic priest,
But countless priests have died
And unto them no day of feast
Has since been set aside.

Unto the humble and the low
A friend he tried to be,
And though he lived long years ago,
Remembered still is he.

'Twas this that made St. Patrick great:
His life to mercy ran.
He never harmed his faith with hate,
But loved his fellow man.

Mrs. T. A. Gardiner is visiting friends in St. Catharines.

The continued cold weather has had the effect of holding the ice in the river and in consequence there is no change in the situation at the bridge. This morning the water rose to some extent in the back yards on the west side of Front Street, north of the footbridge, but up to the present time the great inconvenience has been caused. A gang of men is engaged in cutting a channel at the mouth of the river below the railway bridge. The ice from the railway bridge to the footbridge remains intact and is of considerable thickness.

In a successful attempt to stop a runaway team this morning, the Rev. J. J. Geen, of this city, was the victim of a painful accident. About 7.30 o'clock he was proceeding along Bridge Street West, near the lower bridge, when the horses were attached to a delivery wagon came towards the bridge running at a fast rate of speed and without a driver. Mr. Geen succeeded in grasping the lines and stopped the horses, but in doing so was dragged a considerable distance. At first he did not think that he was seriously hurt and proceeded to his place of business. At the store, however, his injuries were found much more serious and a doctor was called. It was found that a shoulder was dislocated and he sustained several severe cuts and bruises. He is resting comfortably at his home.

CHURCHES AND CHURCH ATTENDANCE

By RALPH CAMPBELL

Oxford, England (Special)
An outstanding feature of Britain from an ambitious point of view is the profusion of beautiful cathedral spires which grace her cities and villages. But the type of building by no means denotes the quality or sincerity of the views held by the worshippers who enter it regularly and who give it support. Perhaps, it would be a good idea to distinguish the church buildings, then the denominational distribution, and finally the practice of church attendances here in Britain.

Architecturally, the oldest and most beautiful buildings belong to the established church, the Church of England. Those built prior to 1535 were, of course, originally Roman Catholic, but after the Reformation they became Anglican. In this group are included the parish church of practically every farming village, and the larger churches of the old market towns. And of course there are the cathedrals. Pertaining to describe them no word is quite appropriate, although perhaps "inspiring" or "inspirational" would do.

Slow Growth

In spite of the great growth of population, several of the old "Cathedral Towns" are not much larger than when they were centuries ago. York Minster, Ely Cathedral, Chester Abbey, Durham — they still stand in a well-set or crooked, narrow lanes, monuments not only to the cause for which they were built, but monuments, too, to the skill and care of their craftsmen, the like of whom we no longer see. Yet some of these ancient "Cathedral" rings are now surrounded by traffic and industrial districts. Such is the case with Westminster Abbey and Worcester Cathedral. There is Oxford, touching the sidewalk of the business street, Canada's Banff, with the Rockies of which was used to defend the city against the Danes or marauding Scottish tribes, long before William the Conqueror built Windsor Castle in 1066, its name, appropriately enough, is St. Michael-in-the-North Gate.

Not all the churches are old, however, many are the product of the impetus to building and expansion given by the Industrial Revolution in the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries. The architecture has always constructed of stone, the greater none are built of brick. Usually there has been an attempt to adapt the type of architecture, but the results are often less than satisfactory. Great new industrial centres such as Birmingham, Manchester, and Sheffield have tried to ape the past with huge and expensive churches. Perhaps their failure to succeed is only a reflection of poorer physical material used, or perhaps today we have lost some of the arts of the past.

Labor Areas Methodists

The failure of the Church of England to shake off its lethargy during the distressed period at the Industrial Revolution resulted in the loss of many of the industrial areas to non-conformists. The coal-mining and cotton spinning districts, along with other industrial areas, are strongly Methodist, Congregationalist, and Baptist, although other denominations are represented. In the main, it is the working class who attend "chapel", and the middle and upper classes who still go to the Church of England, except in these newly built-up areas has been left to the latter church's attendances here in Britain.

VIRUS INFECTIONS MILD—BUT NOT ALWAYS

One morning he noticed a slight dryness of the nose and the throat. During the day nasal irritation developed causing an urge to sneeze, which was suppressed (being a physician and realizing the menace of a sneeze to others in the presence of an undiagnosed infection, he merely refused to sneeze. It can be done. However, at the end of the day, all the symptoms common to CRI were well established.

The following day a cough developed, but nasal obstruction was very slight and secretion from the nose was not excessive. During the following two weeks the desire to sneeze persisted and was not always controllable. The cough remained and was dry and harsh.

During this period the doctor felt "washed out" and lacked his usual energy. A slightly stuffy head restore his energy. He arose feeling just as fatigued as he did the night before. It was this effect that troubled him more than anything else, until the end of the two weeks when a severe headache developed.

The pain at the headache was centered in the back of the head but "fanned out" to the extent that even moving the eyes increased the pain. At this stage, the doctor treated himself with penicillin for two days without noticeable effect. He resisted the urge to stop his work—the responsibilities of his work, he felt, were too pressing. Possibly a slight scorn, perhaps, of a minor ailment was a factor in his determination to carry on.

The doctor suffered the headache for a week. One tentative find it necessary to take additional pews weekly. At "Harvest Home", at the Anniversary Service and Thanksgiving in Ontario, we were always glad to see everyone seated in the choir, the only available seat in the congregation was not worthwhile, since neither in the Church of England nor in the Presbyterian Church do they use many of the tunes we like to sing, and the words are set to unfamiliar music.

We attended Evensong in Westminster Abbey prior to Christmas, and it is another type of experience. Sitting in the famous Poets' Corner, with the side lights flickering over the vast stonework, creating eerie shadows and hearing the great body of the Abbey in semi-darkness, the magnificent tones of the organ, and the clear, high voices of the choir boys' chants, it was a service long to be remembered. Somehow in a setting such as that, a sermon does not seem to be necessary to make one feel the Spirit of Love.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

ELABORATE COURTESY

In one of the most interesting books by the late E. V. Lucas, the English writer and publisher, I found this sentence: "And the thought struck me that there can be no defence like elaborate courtesy." He was talking to the great Polish writer, Joseph Conrad, who inspired the remark.

When we go into a store to buy something, about which we have a definite idea, we hope to meet with the utmost courtesy on the part of those who would serve us if we are defeated in this, the desire is the loser, not us. I am reminded of a big St. Louis store that celebrates each year a day which they term as "carnations for courtesy", and they emphasize the idea and all the workers in that store wearing a carnation. When I read about this it made me want to go into that store and buy something just to add my applause to such an idea.

In my early selling days I travelled from coast to coast and met all sorts of men to whom I hoped to sell my wares, and this is what I discovered: the easiest to talk to, and the men of most influence and power, were the most courteous. The big men are big in courtesy. You feel this about Lincoln as you read about him. He was always courteous and kind to the humblest as well as to the great.

I recall a true story about an old darky who went into a New York department store as it was about to close. No one paid any attention to him, and the clerk who gave her the utmost in courtesy, while all others were in a hurry to leave the store. That woman happened to be the wife of a drew Carnegie who later sent in a big order to be executed for her cousin's benefit. There is no specific instruction that no one but that young man should be sent to carry it out!

Nearly every day in my town I have friends who are selling at a certain restaurant, largely for the reason that every one is so pleasant and courteous there. There are no spiritual entrees upon the menu card, but one or more are served to you, anyway —at no extra charge. Those might be termed courtesy entrees. No wonder this place is crowded each day!

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

With all this talk about Hitlombs and reconstruction, I find myself starting to pack, as it were.

Not all the worldly goods with which a man endows himself, what is needful for everyday, in the middle of the night, he had to have ready for flight, for the open country or the wilderness!

If he had his car—what would clerly he'd have to content himself Pictures, paintings? No: Cutlery? No; only a few pots and pans that would go into the car trunk.

Books? Ah! That is a tough one. You can stand in front of your few hundred books and try to figure which dozen or twenty of them you would carry in the precious space to in your car, if headlong, desperately and without deliberation, into the unknown. Allow yourself only twelve books; and see for yourself which you would take.

Blankets, ah yes! Clothes! Only the warmest, roughest, most durable. Boots, socks, leather windbreakers, caps, mackinaws, mitten gloves. Sweaters rather than shirts. It is astonishing how little of what a man's house is filled with would be useful in case of the great emergency that now hangs like a cloud over the presidents, scientists. It is staggering to think how much of our daily accumulations we would abandon without a second thought.

But assuming we could not take the car. Suppose we had to take only what we could carry on our backs and in valises in our hands. We certainly could not take twelve books. Could we take three? And what three would they be, out of all these books? . . .

And which coat, which boots, which knives and forks, which drawer—not the dining room drawer! Which pots, which pans? A little revealing, that mind in this direction invests with a startling clarity the homelist articles in the house.

Senate Approves Bill to Ban Secret Orders-in-Council

Ottawa, March 17 — (CP) — Secret Orders-in-Council will be banned under a bill approved in principle in the Senate Thursday.

The bill now goes to the Senate committee on banking and commerce for detailed study. It was sored by Senator A. K. Hugessen (L—Quebec), Legislation makes it mandatory for the government in matters public all orders-in-council of a legislative character 15 days after they are passed.

Senator A. W. Roebuck, (L—Ontario) suggested that the measure be amended so no government order will be valid unless it goes story within 15 days of public file filing.

He gained support from Senator John T. Haig, Progressive Conservative leader, and Senator Hugessen said he would take the matter up with the government.

He disclosed that all orders-in-Council of a legislative nature up to March 31, 1949 will be made public in a book now being compiled by the government.

Strength for the Day

DR. EARL I. DOUGLASS

NO MORE CRUTCHES

A woman who had apparently lost the power of locomotion and had for a long time used crutches was going up stairs one day when she suddenly fell, her crutches rolling to the bottom of the stairs. She called for help, but there was no one else in the house. She knew she must get up. To make a long story short, she pulled herself to her feet, found that she could walk, although with considerable difficulty, and from that day to this has never used crutches.

Happy the day for all of us when, befathing happens which makes our crutches roll to the bottom of the stairs. Some of us are depending too much on other people. There are certain others who have long used the crutches of inherited wealth and when, during the last two decades, the crutches were knocked from under them, they could not walk. They would ever stand erect and walk. There are times when accidents occur and we have to use crutches and there are some unfortunate people in the world who have to use them all the time. But many a man who walks along the street with his head held high is spiritually and mentally limping along on a pair of crutches God Almighty never intended him to use. When trouble comes, he cries out against it and calls it injustice. But often it is nothing more than a merciful snatching away of his crutches. Some of us need to demand that he use the powers which have always been his.

4 Union Members Confer With Labor Minister

Trenton (Special)—A delegation of four union members met with Mr. G. Beckett and Mr. Val Bjarnason, attended the annual presentation of the labor heel by the cabinet ministers in Toronto, Thursday. Present at the meeting were 150 people representing the 250,000 members of the Ontario Federation of the Trades and Labor Congress, (A.F. of L.). Also in attendance was Premier Frost and his cabinet.

The Trenton delegation conferred with Minister of Labor Daley, concerning the strike at the Downs Coulter Co. plant, Mr. Beckett said that he would not comment on the outcome of the meeting with Mr. Daley for fear of jeopardizing the union's case. Mr. Beckett added, however, he was still of the opinion the closing of the plant was merely an attempt to break the union and said, As for the charge concerning communist elements in our union, I would even lower myself to put up an argument."

Both Sides Suffer

Effect of the indefinite shutdown of Downs Coulter plant is widespread and touches the pocketbook of every Trenton merchant besides many outside interests. Loss to the company is heavy.

It is reckoned that the company distributed in the neighborhood of $300,000 yearly in wages while providing jobs for 160 textile and office workers.

Spring and summer orders have already been cancelled through failure to deliver announced plant manager Fred Downs who claimed that company connections have been ruined for years to come. The Downs Coulter manufactured cloth that found markets for suiting with domestic and foreign firms.

Management's withdrawal from the 11-week-old battle with the union has eased the strain on the Trenton budget, however. Town police patrols in three eight hours shifts has cost the ratepayer $50 per day on an average. Now that the vigilance has ended the police department will endeavor to return to normal with the release of several special duty constables who were hired to bolster the local force when pickets were blamed for smashing factory property.

Saving in electricity used to floodlight the company grounds nightly and paid by the town of Trenton will amount to considerable sum.

Struck by Car

James Brown of 235 West St. was struck by a car as he was crossing Dundas St. in front of the Lotus Cafe last night shortly after eleven o'clock.

Driver of the car, Len Hillier of Sydney St. stated that he turned out to pass a transport and did not see Brown. He said he felt a slight bump against his rear door and that when he got out he saw Brown lying on the road.

Dr. Byrne was called and administered first aid. Brown received a cut on his upper lip, requiring six stitches and another cut on the back of his head.

Murder-Suicide Probed by Police In Vancouver

Vancouver, March 17—(CP)—Police today seek a motive for the "murder-suicide" Thursday night in an east-end rooming house which resulted in the death of a 38-year-old landlady and a roomer.

Dead are Jacob Toews, 50, and Gertrude Bonner.

An 80-year-old bystander, Fred Gell, injured when he tried to intervene, told police Toews shot Miss Bonner and minutes later turned the .30-.30-calibre rifle on himself. Gell, suffering from shock, told his story from a hospital bed.

"Toews came in the back door," he said. "He was carrying a rifle."

"There was an argument. Then they scuffled. Miss Bonner was screaming into the bathroom and shut the door."

Gell said Toews pushed open the door, shot her down, struck him (Gell) in the face when he tried to intervene and then shot himself a few minutes later. Gell said he then ran for help.

Police said the rifle was bought by Toews Thursday and that the dead man had been separated several years from his wife and four children at Chilliwack.

MacKenzie's Column: Muscovites May Want to End Cold War and Get Peace

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press News Analyst)

Stalin, Molotov and other prominent members of the Moscow hierarchy have been preaching the gospel that, after all, it is possible for communism and capitalism to live together in peace and harmony.

They have hammered at this thesis persistently despite the fact that it is in direct contradiction of one of the cardinal tents of Lenin's own creed. The father of Soviet Communism said there isn't room enough for both isms in the world, and that capitalism must be killed.

On the basis that only fools and dead men never change their minds, let's assume that Moscow may have changed its views on this matter (though I don't believe it has), and that it would be possible to establish the world for non-communist governments. Want Peace?

If this assumption were correct it would mean that the Muscovites want to end the cold war and get peace. If they wanted peace they obviously would be prepared to make concessions and co-operate with the democracies in establishing peace.

Thursday State Secretary Acheson made a major statement of American policy at Columbia University of California, telling Russia exactly how we could achieve peace. In effect he called Moscow to fish or cut bait in this matter.

At the same time he told his audience bluntly:

"I fear, however, that I must warn you not to raise your hopes.

"No one who has lived through the post-war years can be sanguine about reaching agreements in which reliance can be placed and which will be observed by the Soviet leaders in good faith."

Among the steps which Acheson called upon Russia to take was joining with the Western Allies in drawing up peace treaties for Japan, Germany and Austria, and trying to make them satellites. Russia, he said, should stop using her military forces to maintain Red governments in the satellites.

Quit Obstruction

The Soviet Union should quit its obstruction in the United Nations or quit. The organization could function normally, and Moscow should join in establishing atomic control and limitation of armaments.

Russia should stop using communist party apparatus to overthrow established governments with which the Soviet government stands in an outward state of friendship and respect.

There is no real evidence, as far as I can see, that Moscow has any intention of halting that drive to communize the world. It is the essence of the present-day communism.

Moscow's attitude toward Acheson's statement will illuminate this point.

Matthew Halton Criticized Over British Elections

Ottawa, March 17 —(CP) — Matthew Halton, CBC London correspondent, was criticized and defended in the Senate Thursday as two shots were fired at CBC operations.

Senator John T. Haig, Progressive Conservative leader, said Mr. Halton's reports from London during the recent United Kingdom general election were "biased."

He charged that Mr. Halton allegedly favored the Labor party although other persons broadcasting from the CBC London studios, such as representatives of the Manchester Guardian, gave a fair picture.

Defending the CBC correspondent, Senator Norman Lambert (L-Ontario) said Mr. Halton was considered by those engaged in newspaper work as "a most competent fellow objective reporter."

Senator Lambert said he did not believe that Mr. Halton had "colored" his broadcasts of the election. He recalled that in a New Years broadcast Mr. Halton had forecast defeat of the Labor government.

727,000 Pupils Now Attending Public Schools

Toronto, March 17—(CP)—Enrolment in Ontario schools increased 25,000 in the last year and now stands at 727,000, Premier Frost said in his budget speech in the Ontario Legislature today.

A building program, to keep pace with the increasing enrolment, reached its full volume last year, Mr. Frost said, and added new schools, or additions to existing schools, will be built this year at a cost of about $25,000,000 providing accommodation for an additional 27,000 pupils. In the coming year, another 228 school buildings, providing facilities for 32,000 pupils, would be completed.

By September, 1951, Ontario will have largely overcome the shortage of functional school buildings, which has been a legacy of two wars," said the premier, "and the province will compare favorably with any similar area in Europe or North America."

BAN DEMANDED

Toronto, March 17 (CP)—Banning of dancing, floor shows, and music halls, all night clubs and the liquor quotas was demanded Thursday by a temperance delegation which appeared before Judge W. J. Robb, chairman of the Ontario Liquor Licence Board.

A brief presented by the delegation said:

Judge Must Pay Income Tax On Honorarium

Ottawa, March 17 (CP)—The income tax appeal board Thursday ruled that a judge who is given a special honorarium for his services as Royal Commissioner for a provincial inquiry cannot exempt that sum for income tax purposes.

The judge in the case, named only as "Mr. C," has his appeal dismissed with costs and was critized sharply for part of his remuneration — $5,000 — from one of the members of the three-man board.

The judge sought exemption from income tax of $15,000 which he received from the province "solely as an honorarium as an appreciation of the great volume of work and responsibility you have assumed in addition to your judicial duties."

He claimed that because it was an honorarium, the money was not taxable.

He was described as "a member of the bench of one of the courts in one of the provinces of Canada" appointed prior to 1949" to investigate "a certain matter in the province." He made his report towards the end of Jan. 1945.

Mr. Fisher said: "... an appellant appearing to this board—at least as far as I am concerned—has position as solely as a taxpayer appealing against an assessment, and it makes no difference what his position in civil life may be, whether he be the most learned or the most illiterate, the richest or the poorest, or any of the many other extremes which we find among among taxpayers, each and every appellant is entitled to the same consideration when he appears before this board..."

AT THE BELLE

'Samson and Delilah'

Cecil B. DeMille long has contended that a great motion picture could be made from any story pages of the Bible. He proved it with his memorable "King of Kings", "The Ten Commandments", and "The Sign of the Cross" and promises to dispel any remaining doubts with his latest Technicolor epic, Paramount's "Samson and Delilah" which opens Sunday at the Belle Theatre.

A tremendous undertaking that saw 14 years elapse between the time the original treatment was written and the final editing completed, "Samson and Delilah" will go down in motion picture history as DeMille's greatest production, according to advance reports. That's high praise, indeed, for a man whose previous pictures not only have set boxoffice records but have won a permanent place in filmdom's hall of fame.

Casting "Samson and Delilah" was a tremendous problem in itself, and it took more than a year to complete. Victor Mature as Samson, Hedy Lamarr as Delilah, Angela Lansbury, Dellah's beautiful sister, and Henry Wilcoxon, the stern military Governor of Dan.

Appearing for the first time on the screen in Technicolor, Miss Lamarr is more breathtakingly beautiful than any moviegoer has a reasonable right to expect, most critics will agree, ever was.

The selection of Victor Mature to play Samson is an inspired bit of casting. From the standpoint of fitness as well as physique, the rugged, handsome star is tailor-made for the part.

As in DeMille pictures, the supporting roles in "Samson and Delilah" are filled by veteran players who time and again have demonstrated their ability to maintain a high level of performance set by the stars. Included in the cast of thousands are Olive Deering, Fay Holden, Julia Faye, William Farnum, Nils Asther, Minna Gombell, Moroni Olsen, Pitt Herbert, Mike Mazurki, George Reeves and Frank Reicher.

The climax of "Samson and Delilah", of course, is the destruction of the Philistine Temple. A challenge even to DeMille, the man whose directorial credits include the crossing of the Red Sea, the siege of Acre and the storming of Fort Pitt, the scene took eight days to film and is regarded as the most spectacular catastrophe ever staged.

But it should not be assumed that the picture is purely and simply a spectacle for "Samson and Delilah" is one of the greatest love stories of all time. Far from neglecting that angle, according to advance reports, DeMille, thrillingly has filmed all the poignancy and passion, tenderness and savagery inherent in the relationship between the proud Dante and the tempestuous Philistine charmer.

The marriage took place in Belleville, on March 10th., of Miss Doreen Catherine Fairman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Fairman, Carrying Place Road, to Mr. Douglas Walter Norton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Norton of Northport. The ceremony was performed at the home of Rev. C. A. Perkins, pastor of Hollaway United Church.

Mr. Jack Norton, brother of the groom, was the groomsman.

Following the wedding, a reception was held at the home of Mr. Dan Fairman, Sidney Street, Belleville, for the immediate relatives and a few close friends of the bride and groom.

Mr. and Mrs. Norton left for a wedding trip to Toronto and upon their return they will reside in Belleville.

Guests included Mr. and Mrs. Walter Norton, of Northport; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Fairman, of Trenton; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Spry, of Trenton; Mrs. John Fairman, King Street, Trenton; Mrs. Catherine Fairman, Trenton; Don Fairman, of Toronto, and sister; Mildred, of Toronto; Mr. Orland Fairman, of Trenton; Miss Helen Beatty, of Plainfield, and Mr. Jack Armstrong, Belleville.

Vocal Artistry of Thos. O'Brien Shown to Advantage in Recital

Last evening in Belleville Collegiate auditorium, Thomas O'Brien, New York Irish lyric tenor, and concert artist, sang his way into the hearts of Belleville's music lovers as he carried them 'on wings of song' through a delightfully arranged program of opera excerpts, Irish Folk songs, sacred classics, Irish ballads, and popular airs, marking an outstanding musical treat, sponsored by St. Michael's Sodality.

Beginning with the more difficult scores, including Handel's, "Ombra Mai Fu," from Xerxes, and "Wherever You Walk" from the Oratoria, "Semele" with the lightsome happiness of the former, and the stately "Largo" of the latter, through the yearning quality of "O Del Mio Amato Ben," by Donaudy, to the poignant sadness of "Una Fuertive Lagrima" of Donisetti, all were portrayed by depth of feeling and ease of expression.

In the Irish folk songs, which were arranged by Herbert Hughes, Mr. O'Brien used his own interpretation, which received much applause. These included, "Norah O'Neise," "My Lagan Love," and "Give Me a Night," The Fisherman, of Trenton; Miss Helen Beatty, of Plainfield, and Mr. Jack Armstrong, Belleville.

best advantage, especially in the lovely rendition of "Panis Angelicus", and a "Prayer to Our Lady" which was so well received that it was repeated at the close of the recital as a request number.

"Ave Maria" was sung with great sweetness of expression as also was "Largo" as were the ballads "Mary of Argyle", and "I Hear You Calling Me". This was followed by the encore, "Mother Machree" which earned prolonged appreciation.

The closing numbers included descriptive songs, "The Old Turf Fire" and "Ireland, Mother Ireland", followed by "Danny Boy" "Bless This House," and "Say a Prayer." All of which were rendered with clarity of understanding that was so characteristic throughout the program.

Mr. O'Brien has studied voice in Italy and in the United States, and also was a pupil of Lauritz Melchior, John McCormick. His remarkable gift of interpretation, coupled with the appealing tonal qualities his lyric tenor, and pleasing personality will stand him in good stead in reaching that longed-for goal, which every true artists cherishes, viz., the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Mrs. Francis Kinney, also of New York, piano accompanist with Mr. O'Brien on his tour of eastern cities, provided a brilliant background for the vocal artistry of Mr. O'Brien.

Mrs. W. May Commended for Mission Band Work

In the absence of the president, Mrs. Harrison, through illness, Mrs. D. Archibald presided over Tabernacle Church W.M.S., and Mrs. Harback acted as secretary in the absence of Mrs. Brickman.

Plans were made for attendance at the presbyterial in Napanee. Mrs. Skeggs as official delegate and Mrs. Paul as alternate.

Nominations were received to fill the slate of officers who are retiring from the executive of the presbyterial. It was reported to the Society that one of the members, Mrs. W. May, has been nominated by the Dominion Board for her outstanding and successful work as secretary of Mission Bands in the presbyterial. Mrs. May has inspired and helped to organize 15 new Mission Bands during her one year in that office.

Mrs. A. H. Fisher in her report as Christian Temperance secretary told of the disastrous effect of alcohol on the unborn child of a drinking mother. She also reported that in India by April 6th, Bombay State will go completely "dry" becoming the second state to ban the use of liquor by everyone excepting foreigners members of the militia, and the medical profession. Surely but steadily prohibition is coming to India.

Miss Johns led in the devotional service, Her theme "God at work among men through the Holy Spirit" and in a very capable way reviewed a chapter of the study book "Enlightening The Mind" showing the work and growth of the church by religious education. She was assisted by Mrs. Izard.

ELDORADO - BANNOCKBURN W.I.

Eldorado— The Eldorado and Bannockburn Women's Institute held their March meeting at the home of Mrs. Clayton Blackburn. Owing to bad roads, the smaller crowd than usual was present. Mrs. Charles Carman, the president opened the meeting. Roll call was answered by 11 members, two visitors in the persons of Mrs. Alfred Bird and Mrs. Earl Wartman of Cooper. Minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary treasurer, Mrs. Bert McCarey. Business was then dealt with. It was decided to have Mr. Way of Tweed show slides on his trip through Alaska.

The historical research convener, Mrs. Hugh Barker had a wonderful program prepared on "Historical Research" on which much labor and time had been spent.

Mrs. Albert Empey gave a paper on the "History of Hastings County," while Mrs. C. D. McCann gave a paper on the history of Madoc township and the first presbyterian Church in Madoc.

Mrs. Barker then showed a number of pictures on "Old Time Dyes and Ways of Working." Mrs. Clayton Blackburn gave a paper on Soldiers' Aid and their first use and how they were made. Mrs. Barker then gave an amusing reading on "Mama Spanks Me."

Refreshments were served by the hostess and her assistants with a social half hour being enjoyed.

The Dilemma Of the Dish-Pan

Two recent dispatches point to a dilemma faced by the housewives of the world. A London doctor warns that putting the hands in dish water is a very bad thing indeed. Continued dabbling in the dish pan can cause an ominous sounding ailment called dermatitis. This is apparently one old tried, true companion "dish pan hands" appearing under an assumed name. The good doctor has little to offer as a cure, he advises the use of rubber gloves and against putting too much detergent in the water. The only other remedy short of the purchase of an automatic dish washer would seem to either press a defenceless husband into service or possibly the dermatitis-ridden woman will hurl the entire pan full of dishes into the ash can.

What makes things worse is that authoress Vicki Authority, the Ontario Association of Professional Engineers, has released the results of a dreamy survey they have just completed. This survey sets down what women have long suspected.

According to this body it learned engineers the average bride washes 18,000 dishes in the first year of her married life. By the golden anniversary she has brought the total up to the ghastly sum of 1,500,000 dishes which she has swished through the dish pan.

Apart from the fact that such a statistic may well undermine the institution of marriage should it be read by carefree, young girls who live in their innocence undreamed they would encounter such a mountain of dirty dishes it poses a problem to the unfortunate wife who has been sternly warned against the dangers of dunking her lily-whites in that sordid article—the dish pan.

Luckily we see little hope for the unfortunate soul in her dilemma. She has a choice of either resigning herself to washing 1,500,000 dishes, wearing out untold numbers of rubber gloves in the process, or she can live dangerously and risk dermatitis. Of course there is one answer—her husband can take her out to dinner. (Brockville Recorder and Times.)

Radio and cheese are here to stay.

The art of cheese making and that branch of science which includes radio waves have found a common ground. Three Cornell scientists recently discovered a way to pasteurize cheese with radio waves.

Pasteurizing cheese is naturally an easier job than pasteurizing milk from which cheese is made, since 1 pound of cheese represents 10 pounds of milk in the raw stage.

This 10-in-1 concentration means that a small amount of cheese gives you a large amount of food value. The concentrated flavor of cheese makes it especially useful to cooks for sparking the taste of bland dishes.

Continental cooks rely on the flavor of cheese to step up the flavor of anything from minestrone soup to Caesar salad.

During Lent, when many families eat non-meat dishes, cheese can be used to give body and pleasing flavor to a wide number of dairy and fish dishes.

Baked Flounder, Cheese Topping. Serves 4.

Wash 1 pound of filet of flounder. Pat dry with a clean cloth but do not discard paper. Sprinkle with salt, celery salt and white pepper.

Chop 1-4 cup onions and 1-4 cup green peppers very fine. Place in a pan with 3 tablespoons butter or margarine. Simmer over a very small flame until onions turn yellow.

Combine onions and peppers with 1 cup of white bread crumbs. White crumbs can be made by putting hard slices of white bread through food grinder. Add 1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley, 1-4 cup grated American cheese and 2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese.

Add 1-4 cup milk or enough to make crumbs sufficiently moist to spread on the fish and yet hold their shape. Add salt and pepper to taste.

Cut flounder into 8 pieces. Spread bread crumb mixture on fish. Sprinkle lightly with paprika. Place pieces of fish on a greased baking pan. Bake in a hot oven 475 degrees until crumbs are lightly browned about 15-18 minutes.

Serve with tomato sauce. Heat 1 8-ounce can of tomato sauce or 1 can of undiluted tomato soup.

Good Religion Provides Inner Resources

By ROY L. SMITH

The scientists made a great discovery when they found out that a man can gorge his stomach with food and still starve.

There are some foods which provide no vitamins—those weird little hoodlums which form the basis of health, strength, and growth.

Jesus must have had something of this idea in mind when he said to the woman at the well: "He that drinketh of this water shall thirst again, but he that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst."

Good and Bad Religions

A very common mistake made in these modern days is the assumption that "if it is a religion it is good, for all religions are good."

There are faiths which provide one with inner resources, and there are other faiths which leave the believer as helpless and as ineffectual in meeting life as he was before he believed.

There are religions which produce a deep sense of peace and security, and there are other religions that have the effect of filling all of life with fear.

The Christians Had to Have Something

Those first century Christians lived in a world that was altogether unfriendly. The Roman government was suspicious; the Jews were antogonistic; the pagans were contemptuous.

The Christians came preaching a series of virtues which were despised by the successful people of the time. The doctrine of the second mile sounded like cowardice to a Roman, and the doctrine of the other cheek was little better than silly. The cross was a mark of shame, and kindliness was regarded as being something ridiculous.

The Sunday School Lesson for March 19: "The Faith That Sustained The Church," Acts 21:7—26:32; Romans 5:1-8; Hebrews 12:1-3; 1 John 1.

Faced by the prospect of persecution, without prestige or power, glorying in the name of one who had been executed as a felon, the Christians had to find some inner source of strength or they could not hope to stand up against the pressure of paganism.

Faith is Creative

It makes all the difference what a man believes. Some beliefs have the effect of enriching life, and others have the effect of impoverishing life. Faith has consequences, and faith in the wrong thing will have evil results while faith in the right thing will have creative effects.

Faith and Experience

The faith of those first century Christians has them into profound experiences, and these experiences in turn had the effect of renewing their faith.

On one occasion the apostle Paul was a world authority. On the Damascus Road he had an experience with God, out of which he came with convictions that nothing could shake. He believed he enjoyed the favor of God. Let any man believe he has the endorsement of the Almighty and it is extremely difficult thereafter to discourage or disheaten him.

Faith and Fear

Look into the eyes of the average man you meet on the street and you will see the shadow of the fear under which he lives through every waking hour.

He walks every day fearful of losing is job, his health, his credit, his business, his profits, or his advantages.

It is precisely, at this point that good religion offers hope. "Perfect love casteth out fear," and the man who casts his burden upon the Lord will be sustained by the church or the preacher that undertakes to stimulate fear in the mind of the people can hardly be called Christian, even though great claims are made for their religious orthodoxy.

"My peace I give unto you" said Jesus, and millions will testify to the fact that the promise has been kept.

Good Will, Determination Can Solve Financial Problems Between Governments -- Frost

Toronto, March 17.— (CP)— Premier Frost said today in his budget address to the Ontario Legislature that co-operation, machinery to get things done", good will, determination and "the can do spirit" will solve Provincial-federal financial problems.

The Dominion and the Provinces already share the corporation tax and succession duty fields and the Premier expressed the hope the address Ontario would also seek to share the personal income tax field with the Dominion government. Ontario would take up the federal government's offer of five per cent of personal income tax collected in Ontario and would ask the Dominion to collect it for her.

"As between the federal and provincial governments we are very anxious to arrive at measures which will completely remove from the taxpayer the burden by obviating duplication of forms," he said.

There was no reason, for instance, why either government could not collect taxes which would be accepted by the other. Arrangements for joint taxing in these three fields would be so simplified that each government would have the same degree of interest without inconvenience to the taxpayer.

In 1947 Ontario had refrained from re-entering the personal income tax field to permit the federal government to reduce taxation.

The 1950 the situation is alerted and the provincial government is faced with a large work programme which come from the postponements of the war years and the aftermath of war.

Parleys Being Held

Conferences were being held between federal and provincial authorities to arrange for Ontario to collect a tax on logging operations, the Premier said. Dominion-Provincial conference of 1945 the federal government had agreed that income taxes as well as mining and logging were properly a provincial field.

Ontario had taken advantage of the situation in the air as mines were encouraged but "because of the difficulty of determining logging profits" income tax logging were not collected by the provinces.

"Discussions now are being held with the federal authorities in order to establish methods and accounting procedures by which the province may collect taxes on logging operations as it now is doing on mining without affecting the net position of logging operators," he said.

It was hoped a bill to this effect could be introduced before the end of the current session of the legislature.

The provincial income tax of $1,000,000 on mining profits and the logging tax of $1,000,000 "will assist in rationalizing federal-provincial relationships and will give the province the monies to which it is justly entitled without raising—and in fact somewhat flowering—the tax presently paid by Ontario taxpayers."

300 Research Projects Being Carried On

Toronto, March 17 (CP) —Ontario this year will spend almost $500,000 in agricultural research Premier Frost said today in his budget address to the Ontario Legislature.

More than 300 individual research projects are being carried out by the department, he said. To ensure that new developments can be quickly translated into practice the department's extension staff is being strengthened.

The important job of the department was to provide greater support for the marketing of farm produce, speed products to ready market, and seek out new markets.

THRONE-SPEECH

The 22-member commission, headed by Mr. Justice J. A. Hope, was appointed in March 1945 and so far has presented only an interim report. Mr. Millard said the commission has become "a political football." If he were a member of it he would have "rebelled and resigned."

He called the government to call a general election on the issue of unemployment.

Found Goods in Shops

Mr. Millard said he visited Newfoundland last week and found Ontario goods on sale in shops.

"But when you have 14,000 unemployed in a pocket in Saint John and Belle Isle they are not good customers," he said.

The government was afraid of communism it would have to make private enterprise work to provide jobs, he said.

"I am quite prepared to allow the people of this province to decide between the position you are taking and the one we are taking."

The Steep Rock iron ore deposits in northwestern Ontario had been delivered into the control of United States interests, he said, Mr. Millard suggested this was a case of the government "handing away" free enterprise whatever it does."

Hint of Redistribution

Mr. Calder drew from Mr. Frost a hint of redistribution of seats before the next Ontario election. He challenged the premier to deny the plans to redistribute seats at the next session of the legislature.

Mr. Frost said there has been no redistribution for 30 years. In that time the population increased 1,500,000 and asked if Mr. Calder thought it was time for a change.

Mr. Frost: "We trust the people."

Mr. Calder said the government was "throwing its money away" and with a general election coming up he would "prefer there be no change." Corruption was not so "gross" as it once was, he said.

Talks About Future

Mr. Frost asked if he was suggesting the government was guilty of a scandal or corruption.

Mr. Calder: "I am talking about the future. Everything is rosy now."

Mr. Porter said he had told the House last year progress in education would not be held up "just because a commission is sitting". Yet when he announced changes in the school system Mr. Millard was accusing him of "a great betrayal".

"Alcohol education in schools was part of the health training course," he said. It was designed to "inculcate the principles of temperance rather than to infuse into their minds a lot of propaganda about what they would do."

Answering Mr. Millard's charge that taxpayers bore "a crushing burden of taxation" to pay school costs, Mr. Porter said education cost the average taxpayer "about $40 a year—"just about the same as a personal telephone bill."

In his speech, Mr. Millard also said Progressive Conservative victories in the three by-elections since the last general election can be construed as endorsement of the Charlottetown Gitts. Act.

"The air of confidence" worn by the government was "not very well based," but only did it represent only about 40 per cent of the electorate but in the Cochrane North by-election it had to form a coalition to win.

To improve rural life the government was attempting to provide clear highways, skating rinks, skating rinks, and community halls, aid in education and extension of electricity to farm residents. Service would be extended to an additional 30,000 in the next year.

During 12 months ending Oct. 31, 4,738 miles of rural hydro lines were built and 35,206 customers added.

PROVINCE

The treasurer's department provided most of the revenue—$131,021,000—headed by $65,000,000 from corporation taxes and $37,500,000 from liquor, $5,500,000 over the estimate. Next came the highways department's $77,000,000 with $17,000,000 from gasoline tax its biggest item.

The provincial debt rose in tune with other spending. At Dec. 31 estimated net debt was $698,124,174, an increase of $26,314,000 over a year ago. Net debt was up $57,000,000 to $530,744,068. Funded debt at $585,350,849 was higher by $50,331,214. Contingent liabilities—debt guaranteed by the province—stood at $259,226,684, an increase of $6,982,692.

Against Increase

Against an increase of some $25,000,000 in the net debt since March 31, 1949, Mr. Frost set $168,152,256 in additions to the capital assets of the province: Investments in the province, $117,514,852; provincial lands and buildings, $20,000,000; provincial motor transmission lines, $28,243,568; sundry, $3,600,840. In the same period, the province assumed $485,441,000, represented a per capita increase of $115.72, our net debt position expressed in terms of "standing liabilities" was up per-capita net debt of $115.72, or a reduction. . . of $11.84."

Largest in History

The province's public investment in the province of Ontario is now ending was the largest in history and the forecast was increasing at an even greater rate in the coming year. Much of the investment was self-liquidating. Of the amount payable from taxes in this year, approximately a third had been paid from current revenue.

Public works in the coming year included a new head office for the Workmen's Compensation Board and an annex to the legislative centre on Queen's Park, largely self-liquidating. A start was planned on a new agriculture building near the present government buildings. Work was to be continued on the big east river and its tributaries in the Muskoka area on control dams and lakes. Beginning will be "work on the new control outlet tunnel from Lake Simpson will further reduce properly damage in the vicinity of North Bay."

Capital Expenditure Up

Gross capital expenditure in the coming year was estimated at $115,330,000 compared with $108,-782,000 in the present year, the highways department —with a $46,700,000 building program in sight—is the biggest spender. Fifteen million dollars is to be spent by the Department of Public Works.

The Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario, which spent about $150,000,000 this year, would spend more in the next. The Ontario Northland Railway was plowing back its earnings into its capital equipment to maintain and improve efficiency of its system.

In his reference to the personal income tax, Mr. Frost said that the last three budgets he refrained from accepting the Federal government tax offer "to assist and encourage the Federal government in making tax reductions on our people."

Faced With Projects

"In 1950 the situation is altered and the provincial government is faced with very large work projects which come from the postponement of public works during the war and adjustment years. . . It has been felt because of the Dominion-Provincial conference which will take place this year the provincial government should be in a position to claim these monies, which are rightfully ours, and accordingly providing the province can show that by appropriate taxing statues the tax could be imposed by the province."

Only the premier said the procedure would be to repeal the old provincial income tax act 1936. The new act would be passed enabling the province to levy a tax exercising five per cent of the federal tax. A further act would permit the province to enter into an arrangement under which the federal government would pay to the province five per cent of the income tax it collects in Ontario. Next is a federal bill.

"The effect of this statue would be to rent the personal income tax field to the federal government on the payment to Ontario of an amount equal to five per cent of the taxes paid by Ontario taxpayers to the federal authorities."

The government would not otherwise impose the tax without putting the matter before the legislature again.

Discussions were now being carried on with federal authorities so Ontario could levy a tax on logging operations, deductible from federal taxes. Revenue from this will amount to about $1,000,000 a year.

The amusement tax—officially known as the Hospitals Tax Act —came into force in April, 1948. It was a five per cent tax on amusements and the money went into a special hospital aid fund. Mr. Frost said experience has shown that it would be better to put the revenue into the general provincial funds. Assistance to hospitals would be placed in the budget and voted by the legislature.

Would Give Grants

To help hospitals meet rising costs, the government would pay special grants equal to 25 per cent of hospitals maintenance grant each hospital received in 1949. Payment would be made before April 30 and it would be in addition to the normal grants hospitals would receive in 1950, Mr. Frost placed at $3,000,000.

The reduction—from 30 per cent to 15 per cent—in the amusement tax was to be made on the understanding it would be passed on to the public. Many theatre operators had already undertaken to do so.

It was intended to exempt all amateur sports from the 15-per-cent tax but it would be applied to all "professional or semi-professional sports—that is, where the players are paid." Officials of the Treasury Department and the Athletic Commission would work out the definition of "amateur sport."

University Grants Increased

Grants to Universities will be increased by $810,000, said Mr. Frost. The University of Toronto will get $2,000,000; Queen's $500,000; Queen's and Western $250,000 each; Ottawa $150,000; McMaster and the University of Ottawa will get $100,000 each; Assumption and Carleton College will get $75,000, a $10,000 boost.

In the present year the province paid $70,000,000 in subsidies and grants to municipalities for education and other purposes. Education grants in the next year would total $82,000,000, Mr. Frost said. Increase of $5,136,000. Another $22,000,000 would be paid in capital grants, covering major subsidies.

New secondary hospitals would be opened at Smiths Falls and Aurora and the St. Thomas hospital and Queen Mary would be enlarged. Public hospital grants would total $14,050,000, covering capital construction and maintenance. It was planned to construct $850, 000 for new homes for the aged and another $500,000 toward maintenance.

Rural Hydro-Electric lines would be extended to serve more than 30,000 additional customers.

SUCCEEDED TO OFFICE

On the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt in April, 1945, Harry S. Truman became the seventh vice-president thus to succeed to the presidency of the United States.

No Taxation Changes Seen in Quebec Budget

(By the Canadian Press)

A budget of more than $200,000,000 was presented to the Quebec legislature Thursday by provincial treasurer Duplessis who called it "a token of faith in the province's economic structure."

After estimating a surplus of $7,630,000 for the fiscal year now ending he budgeted for revenues of $201,349,970 and expenditures of $193,719,970 with a capital account in the coming year, with a surplus after debt charges and capital expenditures of $733,100. There were no taxation changes.

The Quebec treasurer called for settlement "without delay" on the problem of tax-sharing between governments, saying that the federal government now collects nearly 70 per cent of the tax money paid in Canada.

The Ontario legislature will hear the budget speech today from Premier Frost, also the provincial treasurer. The Throne-Speech debate ended yesterday with a majority of 49 to 34 for the Progressive Conservative government on three divisions.

At St. John's Fisheries Minister Lesage told the Quebec provincial legislature that unless the province of Quebec can find a market for its fish in Europe this year she may have to turn the fish over to other provinces hemisphere markets, traditionally a field for the Maritime provinces.

Member Asks For Aid

In the Commons house was still on Throne-Speech debate with Louis Fournier (L., Gaspe) asking aid for woods workers in his riding. He said there was 50 per cent to 60 per cent, although prices of forest products were unchanged, last year.

At Charlottetown former Premier Alexander A. MacMillan now leading the Progressive Conservative opposition, moved that Edward Island legislature that no national unity can be achieved and never will exist until the provinces are treated on a fair and equitable basis.

A committee of the Manitoba legislature has been appointed to do a bill amending the defamatory act to enable courts to consider the caption as a story in conjunction with the story itself in connection with libel suits brought. Under present law the caption may be considered alone as a report. The amendment however does not prevent a caption or headline from being considered by a jury.

In the Saskatchewan legislature J. T. McCormack (Liberal-Moose Jaw-Eastevan) charged that employees of provincial public service corporations are worse paid than workers in private industry.

Premier Manning of the Alberta house by a vote of 37 to 26 defeated a C.C.F. motion which urged the government to provide motorcycle escorts for funeral processions insurance at cost. The Speaker's ruling that a motion calling for a two cent cut in the nine-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax was out of order was upheld by 46 to 5.

Public Investment Continues At High Level Says Frost

Toronto, March 17 (CP) —Ontario's public investment is at the rate of more than $31,000,000 a month and the volume of private investment in new plant machinery and equipment continues at a high level, Premier Frost said today in his budget address.

Volume of public and privateinvestment in new capital in 1950 will be about the same as last year when more than $1,300,000,000 was invested in Ontario. The banking system was strong in liquid reserves and in position to extend credit were justified.

The direct capital investment program of the Ontario government this year was about $75,000,000 and the approximate monthly rate more than $6,000,000. Capital investment for highways made up almost half this total. Most of the balance was spread over public works, resource development and rural extensions.

Monthly Outlay High

The Ontario Northland Railway's capital expenditures were about $9,000,000 and that of the University of Toronto $2,000,000. Ontario municipalities spent $68,000,000 on capital investment and over-all capital investment outlay on new works was more than $7,000,000.

Total provincial-municipal capital investment in 1949 was $300,000,000. Counting housing projects financed in part by Ontario government, the total investment rate is more than $31,000,000.

The Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission's capital outlay on the largest public investment program in the province. In the fiscal year ending March 31 it would have spent $150,000,000 an average of $13,000,000 a month.

The government's public investment plans were calculated not to increase revenue and improve business conditions.

Conditions Stimulated

"During this year business conditions in the province have been greatly stimulated by development projects of this government which are all tending to a more prosperous province," he said. "Daily there is a greater power resources and facilities for electrical energy are being made available to this province with greater revenue."

The credit of the province and its subsidiaries was in excellent condition "with the result that we have been able to obtain excellent accommodation from the responsible public bodies from whom we obtain the funds for development of our province."

At March 31, 1950, it was estimated the net debt of the province would be on account was $520,744,-000.

With a $25,000,000 increase in net debt since 1943 there had been added to the province's capital assets $168,150,256 in improvements to highways, provincial lands and buildings, provincial transmission lines and sundry

Ontario Budget Reduced by Amusement Tax

Amusements are going to cost less in Ontario, Premier Frost said today in the budget address in the Ontario legislature.

The 20-per-cent amusement tax for hospitals on admission to places of amusement will be reduced to approximately 15 per cent on "the distinct understanding" that the operators will pass the reduction on to their patrons.

"Already we have letters from the majority of the theatre operators in the province undertaking to pass this tax reduction in total to the people and it is emphasized that the reduction in tax is made with that positive condition," the Premier said.

For children, the governme will exempt from tax tickets of less than 15 cents. Tax on other tickets is called to the nearest levy on tickets costing between 16 and 23 cents to a 15-cent tax on those between 24 and 29 cents. Over 99 cents the tax is 15 per cent.

Under the 1948 hospital aid scheme collected from this tax was paid into the hospitals aid fund. In future it will be paid into the consolidated revenue fund so that assistance to hospitals may be budgetted and voted by the estimates by the legislature.

Examples of rising costs and the impact of inflationary forces' the government will increase aid to hospitals by giving each public general hospital and sanitorium a maintenance grant. Cost of the maintenance grant it received in 1949.

The special grant which will cost about $3,000,000 will be in addition to ordinary maintenance and will be paid before next April 30.

Forest Nursery Stock in Demand Says Premier

Toronto, March 17 — (CP) — Increased demand for forest nursery stock and prospector's licence fees were forecast in province by interest in development of natural resources, Premier Frost said today in his budget address.

Demand for nursery stock increased already and production facilities of Department of Lands and Forests nurseries have been expanded, he said.

The total number of miner's licences issued and renewed or renewed increased by 1,300 in 1949. The number of claims recorded was increased 5,000. Total value of Ontario's mineral production in 1949 was $315,000,000, an increase of $21,000,000 over 1948.

There was considerable development of deposits of asbestos during 1949 in the district of Northern Ontario, Mr. Frost said.

Asbestos has not heretofore been produced commercially in Ontario but a new mill for its production and recovery of magnesium products is being established.

Photographs of Ontario's forests was "practically completed" and would be ready for topographical maps would be completed in the next fiscal year.

Went to Prison For Six Years To Shield Woman

Windsor, Ont., March 17—(CP)—An English-born carpenter who remained mute at his own manslaughter trial 25 years ago went to prison for six years to shield the woman he loved, committed suicide here, police reported Thursday.

Police say they found the body of 80-year-old Walter Bennett Wednesday night in a small downtown hotel. No suicide note was found but a small pen knife lay near his body, police report. Police file identified him.

Tattered newspaper files tell the other story.

In 1924 Bennett stood silent in a window courtroom while a judge sentenced him to 15 years in Kingston penitentiary for the bludgeon death of his landlord, Herbert Bennetto three months earlier.

Bennetto's body was found in the Bennetto home here the night of Nov. 23, 1923. Both Bennett and Mrs. Bennetto were found in the room with the body when police arrived.

In 1931 as she lay dying in Toronto, where she had moved after the trial, Mrs. Bennetto told Toronto police officers she killed her husband. She told police then that Bennett refused to testify against her because he loved her.

A subsequent appeal in Toronto freed Bennett on a ticket of leave after he served six years of the 15-year term. Since then he has lived quietly here, working around the city at his trade.

Police records show that the earlier trial indicated Bennett left a wife and three children in England when he moved alone to Canada.

Three Detroit Players to Split, All Bonus Money

(By The Canadian Press)

With Detroit Red Wings' high-scoring hockey line of Sid Abel, Ted Lindsay and Gordon Howe it's one for all and all for one.

The Detroit trio, currently running one-two-three in the National Hockey League's individual scoring derby, announced Thursday they have agreed to a three-way equal split of any of the $1,500 bonus money awarded by the league to the top two finishers.

The National League awards $1,000 and the Art Ross Trophy to the player scoring the most points in the regular season. A cash prize of $500 goes to the runner-up.

With five games left to play, Lindsay is first in the scoring parade with 23 goals and 49 assists for 72 points. Abel has 67 points for second place on 34 goals and 33 assist while Howe is third with 30 goals and 31 assists for 61 points.

Maurice Richard of Montreal and Paul Ronty of Boston still are conceded to have good chances to break up the Detroit sweep. Ronty is fourth in the league scramble with 57 points and Richard has 56.

The brothers' agreement to split any prize money they might win isn't a new idea. Eddie Shore and Doug Bentley of Chicago Black Hawks, who finished one-two in last year's race, had a similar agreement.

The Giants won the contest 4-3 with a tally in the ninth inning.

He was knocked unconscious and removed from the field on a stretcher. At hospital, his condition was pronounced satisfactory.

Bobby Locke of South Africa may play in the annual Greater Greensboro, N. C., Open golf tournament March 24-26 if the sponsoring Greensboro Jaycees are successful in their request for permission from the Professional Golfers Association to invite the golf star.

At Raleigh, N. C., Richard (Pancho) Gonzales, freshman flash of professional tennis, explained Thursday why he will sit out his sophomore season. "I'm pooped out and tired of looking at tennis balls," sighed Gonzales, "who is in his first year of the play-for-pay game as a member of Bobby Riggs' tennis troupe.

Tommy Ford, 23-year-old former Toronto Argonaut and Beach-ade-Indian halfback, has signed to play with Winnipeg Blue Bombers in the Western Interprovincial Football Union this season, Ralph Misener, club president, announced Thursday.

Gordon Richards, Britain's champion jockey, Thursday opened Lincoln's 1950 racing season by riding a winner on his first mount, Little Go. Richards' horse was a 7-to-1 shot.

The champion is in his 29th year as a jockey and needs 34 winners to take his lifetime total to 4,000. No other jockey has ridden as many. Gordon was leading jockey for the 22nd time in 1949 when he rode 261 winners.

Terrific Struggle Waged Between Canadiens and Leafs For Second Spot in Standings

By HARRY ECCLES
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

A terrific struggle between Montreal Canadiens and Toronto Maple Leafs for second place promises to enliven the last few weeks of the National Hockey League's long schedule.

The Canadiens, with veteran big Bill Durnan back in goal after missing several games through an injury, roared back to hold the Detroit Red Wings to a 2-2 tie Thursday night before a Montreal Forum crowd of 14,006.

Detroit has already clinched the league championship. But the tie put Canadiens within two points of Toronto and the coveted second spot. The top contenders will be Detroit, Toronto, Montreal and New York Rangers, but the pinmele is that the first team plays Cie title while the second team collides with the fourth in the cup semi-finals. And none of them relish a gruelling semi-final with Detroit.

So Canadiens are driving hard for second place. Like Toronto, they five five games left. Today Detroit has 83 points, Toronto 70, Montreal 68, and New York 65, with Boston Bruins still holding a very faint mathematical playoff hope with 58 points and Chicago Black Hawks out of it at 46.

Need One Victory

Rangers need to win only one victory to make their playoff berth a certainty. Before the schedule winds up March 26 Chicago has six games left, with five each for Toronto, Montreal, New York and Boston and only four for Detroit.

The Montreal crowd saw a rugged checkered game in which Detroit rolled up a 2-0 lead. Durnan was beaten by Gordon Howe in the first period and Red Kelly in the second.

In the third frame the Canadiens were flying, while Wings iced the puck at every opportunity.

The Canadien pressure paid off in the 13th period when Maurice (Rocket) Richard scored. Forty seconds later Harvey scored the tying goal on his own rebound from 25 feet out.

They all play twice this weekend with Saturday's card calling for Chicago at Toronto, New York at Montreal and Boston at Detroit. Sunday, Toronto is at Detroit, Montreal at New York and Boston at Chicago. The league holds its regular meeting to settle playoff dates at New York Monday.

Pepp Favored Over Famechon

New York, March 17 — (AP)— Featherweight champion Willie Pep will be gunning for a quick knockout tonight when he risks his featherweight crown against Ray Famechon, the "unknown" French challenger, in a 15-round title bout in Madison Square Garden.

Little too much is known about the European featherweight king, who makes his United States debut in a blue-chip bout.

Wily Willie, however, is in his usual shape since he brought his back in a plane crash three years ago.

The bookmakers have established Wily the Wisp as a standout 5-to-10 favorite. It's even money that the Hartford Hurricane will stop the invader before the limit.

Racing Commission Will be Established by Ontario Govt.

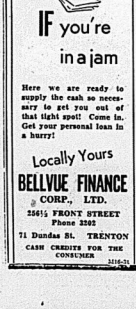
Toronto, March 17 — (CP) — The Ontario government will establish a racing commission to regulate race tracks in the province, Premier Frost announced today in his budget speech in the Ontario Legislature.

Hand-in-hand with that was the news that the government is increasing its 10-per-cent tax on pari-mutuel betting to 12½ per cent and will waste betting by bookmaking at harness race meetings brought to an end.

And the premier, speaking in his capacity as provincial treasurer, got into the sports news picture still further by announcing that the government will remit tax for hospitals — cut by the budget from 20 per cent to 15 per cent — and apply in future to professional or semi-professional sports — "in all cases where the players are paid."

Where the tax was first levied in 1948 it has not applied to sports like Big Four football, Ontario Hockey Association Junior 'A' or Senior 'A' series or intercounty and other baseball where players get cash for their services.

The Premier said it is intended to exempt all amateur sports from the tax but it will apply when players draw a salary for their services to their teams.



"Members of the House will appreciate the great difficulty of defining 'amateur sport,' but the interpretation will be worked out between officials of the Treasury Department and of the Athletic Commission," he said.

Hope for Fair Tax

"It is to be hoped that a fair and workable formula will be found. Let me assure the House that the interpretation will be broad, even generous, but it will be uniformly applied and will be designed to meet the situation in a manner which will be fair to all concerned. It is the intention of the government that all amusements operated for private gain or profit will be taxable ..."

The Premier said that the present racing situation is unsatisfactory. The province has left the regulation of horse racing to the business itself. However, the province had no jurisdiction over betting which was a federal matter. Betting was by pari-mutuels on running tracks and by bookies' shacks on harness race makers on harness racing.

"The government planned three steps: 1. To establish a racing commission to regulate tracks; 2. An effort to have the federal government amend the Criminal Code to make use of pari-mutuel machines mandatory at harness racing; 3. To increase its pari-mutuel tax by 2½ per cent.

Swedish Coach Thinks Canada Will Win Crown

London, March 17 —(CP) Frank Trottier, coach of the Swedish hockey team which expects figure will give Canada the closest race for the world championship, isn't over-confident that his squad can stop the redhot Edmonton Mercurys.

"We'd like to think we had a fighting chance," he told the Canadian Press Thursday. "Actually our main objective in the championship tournament is to win the European crown.

"If the Mercurys play the hockey they are capable of we won't stand much chance for the world title."

Thursday was an off-day for all six teams which qualified for the final round-robin series. The finalists, in addition to Canada and Sweden, are Britain, the United States, Norway and Switzerland. The Czechoslovakian government forbade the Czech team to come to London to defend the crown that country won in 1949.

Today the Mercurys meet Switzerland in a game scheduled to start at 2 p.m. (9 a.m. EST).

Frank Trottier, the man behind the Swedish entry, is a cousin of the renowned Dave Trottier, who was a member of the 1928 world and Olympic champions, Winnipeg Grads, and a long-time stalwart of the old Montreal Maroons team in the National Hockey League. Frank has been "national hockey coach" in Sweden during the last six months.

Thursday night the Mercurys, along with the other eight clubs which entered the tournament, attended a reception given by the Lord Mayor at the mansion house in the heart of the City of London.

ROYALS TIE SERIES

Sherbrooke, Que., March 17 — (CP) — Montreal Royals Thursday night tied their best-of-seven semi-final playoff series with Sherbrooke Saints at 2-2 by edging the home-towners 3-2.

The Niagara Parks Commission announced today that the course, situated on a 170-acre site paralleling the Niagara River will be completed early in July. The club house will be complete with locker facilities, lounges and flagstone terraces.

The course was developed over the last three years and financed from current revenue.

Yardmen Rally To Beat Car Dept. By 4-2 Count

The Yardmen had to come from behind to gain a 4 to 2 win over the Car Dept. and even the best-of-five series for the C.N.R. Interdepartmental Hockey League championship and the Townsend trophy at Memorial arena last night. Each team now boasts two wins with one game ending in a deadlock.

The Carmen held a 2 to 1 lead at the end of the first period only to have the Yard tie the score in the second and go on to notch two more counters in the third stanza to win in handy fashion.

The Carmen's star forward Ray Nolan received a serious mouth injury and was forced to retire from the game in the last period.

Lineups:

Yardmen: Goal, Boyle; defence, Rogers and Ehler; forwards, Ronsky, Hull and W. Nolan; subs, Arno, Little, Hall, Carson.

Car Dept.: Goal, Proulx; defence, Sharpe and Storms; forwards, Culkin, Lockyer and R. Nolan; subs, Mattis, Lupenette, Duval, Taylor, Pope and Shortis.

Training Camp Briefs

(By The Associated Press)

St. Petersburg, Fla.—The line-up of the New York Yankees is beginning to look more like the one that won the world championship last year.

Catcher Yogi Berra, late signing up for 1950, is back, behind the plate and the team's regular second-base combination, Phil Rizzuto and Jerry Coleman, worked together Thursday for the first time this season.

Berra worked eight innings, getting a single and two walks. Rizzuto went hitless in two at-bats but Coleman got one for three as the Yanks walloped Washington, 13-2.

Henry Thomson, Negro third baseman who has shown fine progress, is sidelined with a sprained right ankle which will keep him confined for a few days. Rigney is one hand to fill the gap.

San Francisco — Manager Lou Boudreau of Cleveland Indians is rubbing a smarting left hand and probably thinking its just like old times.

The shortstop was clipped Thursday in Los Angeles by a fast ball off rookie pitcher Bill Connelly in the first inning of a Chicago White Sox — Indians exhibition contest. He stayed in the game, however, which was won by the Tribe, 5-4, in 11 innings.

Simpson Sluggers Did Repeat Job On Grant Growlers

In a Hydro interdepartmental hockey game on Wednesday night in the Memorial Arena, Simpson's Sluggers did a repeat job on Grant's Growlers, defeating the latter by a score of 4-3.

It was a hard fought struggle, with the losers actually enjoying an edge in territorial play but failing to capitalize on the net, where Simpson performed brilliantly.

Farnell opened the scoring for the Growlers but the Sluggers replied with a sizzler from Elvins and then the Sluggers came back with two more by Moynes and Beach to put the Simpson crew in the driver's seat. The Growlers put on the pressure and Davis managed to poke two past Simpson but Beach tucked the game away with his second goal. The Growlers pressed hard but failed to crack Simpson's citadel.

For the winners Cabby Moynes, Beach, Woods and Simpson were standouts with Mifflin doing a useful chore at left wing. Davis, Grant and Gray were the pick of the Growlers. Old warriors of other days who tried hard included 'Grandpa' Messervey, Speedy Dinn, Lam Hallam and Flip Smith. Percy Beary sustained an injury to his shoulder when he fell into the boards. This was not the result of rough play as the game was clean and well handled by the referee, Miss Mary Flynn.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By BOB McALEER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

TORONTO, March 17 — (CP) — What kind of hockey does Joe Fan enjoy — the smooth, clean-ly-played, wide-open game with the pattern passing and dipsy-doodling or the one for the smash clutch-and-grab fiasco with running blood?

Doug (Niagara Falls Sentinel Review) Austin says the man who pays the tariff goes for the dirty type of play with its high-sticking. He goes along with most of the Ontario Hockey Association coaches and managers in saying the refereeing fraternity is playing right into the hands of the gore-lovers.

Doug saw 30 O. H. A. games this season. Of that total he thought that only four could be considered to have been well - handled by the officials. Another 10 rated in the so-so category.

Right up to Pro

"All the way through the entire ice set-up this season from the top pro ranks down to the lowest amateur group, officiating has deteriorated or else the game is now uncontrollable," says Doug.

The situation was brought into the open in the O. H. A. senior A finals, now under way. The Kitchener - Waterloo Flying Dutchmen, playing against Toronto Marlboros, had complained of the refereeing in the first game. They refused to take the ice if the same officials were used for the second till.

Austin comments:

"While we do not completely sympathize with the Kitchener sextet in their referee ultimatum to the amateur hockey fathers, our support goes to them, because they focussed attention on the arbitrating system."

Death Knell

What will happen to the so-called amateur sport promotions if the Ontario Legislature decides to broaden the basis for levying the 20-per-cent hospital amusement tax now only applicable to openly professional sports?

Milt (Toronto Star) Dunnell, thinks sport promoters and officials are clouding the issue with "hackneyed phrases."

"All the amateur or veiled pros, or whatever you want to call them, have to do," says Milt, "is go to the government and tell the truth."

Not Much Profit

Milt states: "With a few exceptions, the truth is this: No person is making a mint out of the phony amateur leagues. A lot of people are taking a licking."

Examine the payrolls, advises Milt, and see where the "heavy sugar" goes.

Those salaries, he says, "are clipped for the regular rate of income tax. That's standard practice now with most of the clubs that count. So the government is being cut in already."

Big Seven

By The Canadian Press

Ted Lindsay of Detroit Red Wings picked up one assist in the National Hockey League contest Thursday night to boost his lead over runner-up Sid Abel, another Red Wing, to six points. Abel was held scoreless as Wings battled to a 2-2 draw with Montreal Canadiens.

CLOSES CHILDREN'S WARD

Niagara Falls, March 16—(CP)—The children's ward in the Greater Niagara General Hospital was closed today. The action was taken "purely as a precautionary measure," when a strange malady developed in six of the 14 young patients, causing high temperatures.

Harry Garwood, hospital superintendent, said that he did not think there was any cause for alarm.

Duplicate tournament players become bold bidders. It is easy to see why. All tables play the same hands. Comparison is made for the results of each deal that comes out.

In competition for the most points in each deal, timid bidders will too often fall short. Not so the bold and aggressive pairs or the expert pairs who can make the most out of the cards.

As a result, some pairs reach many contracts that are difficult to make. Or that could be defeated by a different lead. Or success of which depends on some hairline decision or brilliant play.

Therefore, only those who are expert at play can hope to win by stretching their values. And it is not uncommon for them to go overboard now and then in the confidence of their ability.

In a recent championship a strong pair sat north and south in this duplicate deal:

♥ A Q 8 5
♦ Q J 4
♣ A K J 7

WEST
♠ J 8 6 5 3
♥ 9 7 4 2

EAST
♠ A 10
♥ J 6 3
♦ 9 8 7 4 2
♣ 10 8 3

SOUTH
♠ K Q 7 4
♥ K 10 9
♦ A 10 3
♣ Q 9 5 4

Their bidding went like this:

South	North
1 S	3 N
3 NT	4 NT
5 S	6 NT

With an ace and a king missing, small slam in no-trump is known to be a stretch. But the opponents were not able to discover in time the defence that would beat it.

West made the correct opening lead of spade five. East took the first trick with the ace. An immediate return of spade ten might have killed the contract before the deal ended.

But east saw what looked like a more dangerous return. He came back with a diamond. This gave south the chance he needed to make his small slam. See if you could.

REEVE ANNE SHIPLEY IS ILL WITH THE MUMPS

So far this winter, 1,960 residents of this Northern Ontario gold-mining community have been ill with mumps, but Dr. E. R. Harris, Medical Officer of Health, said today that the epidemic is on the wane.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was talking and arguing with Puds Simkins about different subjects sutch as how mutch difference it would make whether you were hit by a old fashion atomic bomb or a hydrogen bomb if it was just a question of your frends ever seeing you again, and Sam Cross started to go passed carrying a suit case and walking fast as anything, and I said, Hey what's the hurry, Sam, where you think you're going?

I knew darn well where I'm going, I'm running away from home, so dont interrupt me, Sam said.

Him being the most famous liar around, and Puds said. Aw, we've heard you say that before.

Well you wont hear me say it again, because this is the last time you'll see me, Sam said, What's you think I got this suitcase all packed for? I'm sicker tired of being bossed around and told what not to do. You 2 guys can wait a year, and if I'm not back by that time you'll know I haven't changed my mind, so you can tell my mother I said you could have my roller skate; and my ice skates, you can toss up which, he said.

And he kept on going even faster, and me and Puds started to follow him in case he mite really be serious this time on account of the suit case and everything, and we mite get a reward for being the last 2 people that saw which way he went, and when we got to the corner he was nowhere in site, proving he must of started running, and we were still looking up and down every street and we saw Glasses Magee and we asked him if he saw Sam Cross, and Glasses said, Sure, I just saw him on Pickle Street leaving a suitcase full of wash at the colored lady's house that does his mother's laundry. Why, what's you looking for him for? Glasses said.

Me and Puds not saying, on account of having too mutch regards for our dignity.

POLICE TWO

Asset told the inquiry that he did not know what the "C.O.P." notation meant. He said he had never served a (police) officer," and that he had never received any benefits from any police officers nor did I give them any." Said Liet Asset.

Asset said the list was "faked" and "padded" to make his bootlegging business appear profitable because he wanted to sell it and leave Windsor to work with a brother in a garage. Police evidence at his trial was that the business covered some 5,400 individual sales at an average profit of $1 each, in the 90-day period ending Dec. 31.

Windsor Police Chief Claude Renaude and his deputy, R. H. Neale, already have been officially summoned before the commission, along with Sgt. George Browne and Magistrate Hanrahan. No other names have been mentioned as witnesses.

Beside Mayor Reaume the police commissioners are Magistrate Angus W. MacMillan, chairman, and County Judge Albert J. Gordon. The inquiry is being held under authority of the Ontario Police Act and Attorney Bell said Thursday that all witnesses have court protection.

Aware of Location

The liquor sales testimony Thursday was interrupted by a statement from Magistrate Hanrahan that he was aware of the location of an alleged international race service wire in Windsor. Mayor Reaume asked why this information was not turned over to the Windsor police.

The magistrate, a former court reporter but not a lawyer before he ascended the bench, replied that he had the information "in confidence" and that any report would "disclose a source of information" to the provincial police. Mr. Bell said he would like to talk to that source of information and present his findings before the inquiry.

Government Blamed

The motion blamed the government for a decline in export markets, lack of effective social-security program and so-called failure to take adequate measures against subversive elements.

It was supported only by Progressive Conservatives.

The final division was on the motion calling for adoption of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. In this vote it was straight opposition-against-the-government and the count was 151 to 21.

The address simply thanks the Governor-General for having read the Speech from the Throne at the opening of parliament Feb. 16. The speech outlined the government's legislative program for the session and by voting against adoption of the address opposition parties were indicating their dissatisfaction with that program.

The Speech from the Throne was highlighted by the government's announcement that additional assistance would be provided to help Canada's unemployed through the difficult winter months. The bill providing for additional payments to about 100,000 unemployed already has been passed and given royal assent.

Rent Controls Extended

The speech also forecast legislation to extend permanently price support for farm and fish products. Domestic rent controls are to be extended for another year.

The Throne-Speech debate staggered to a close after Solon Low, Social Credit leader, moved a motion of non-confidence in the government. He stressed the need for reforms to eliminate weaknesses in the capitalistic system. There was a need to put an end to weaknesses that caused such things as unemployment.

If people had sufficient purchasing power they could buy practically all that was produced. Surpluses piled up when people did not have the money to buy the goods they needed.

He said he was opposed to a straight contributory old age pension system, because there were some people who could not contribute and thus would be denied a pension. A contributory system he said might be adopted as a supplement to the present non-contributory system.

Wants Universal Scale

Mr. Thatcher said the revenue department should wage its campaign on tax-delinquent farmers on a universal basis. He had nothing against Quebec, but he noted that farmers in that province in 1947 paid only $79,000 in income tax. In the same year, 16,933 Saskatchewan farmers paid tax of $4,000,000; 13,985 Alberta farmers paid $4,000,000 and 7,285 Manitoba farmers paid $1,000,000.

Mr. Adamson called for the eliminating of double taxation on property owners. Home owners, he said, should be allowed to deduct from income tax the amount they pay in property and educational taxes.

Mr. Garland asked for greater assistance for the Canadian tourist industry and urged that the budget of the Canadian Travel Bureau be increased $1,000,000 to $5,000,000 a year. This could help the business boost the tourist industry into a $1,000,000,000-a-year industry.

Mr. Noseworthy and Mr. Knowles renewed C.C.F. demands for removal of the old age pensions means test.

Bomb Explodes In Food Market

Detroit, March 16 — (AP) — A bomb exploded in a Big Bear food market Wednesday night, shaking a wide area of Detroit's northwest section.

The blast blew out the door of the one-storey brick building and smashed scores of windows in the vicinity.

Police Inspector Miles Furling said it probably was a time bomb, planted in the vestibule of the supermarket.

Detective Lieut. George Harrison said the market had labor trouble recently.

SEARCH FOR TENDER

Pearl Harbor, March 16—(AP) — Search centred today 400 miles north of Kwajalein Island for a missing United States Navy tender bearing 33 men en route to Eniwetok Island. She was last sighted 700 miles from Eniwetok in no apparent trouble. A spokesman said it was possible the tender might have struck a floating mine and been sunk. The general feeling here was that her diesel motor had gone dead, silencing her radio.

Bergman Wants Her Money Back From Ex-Husband

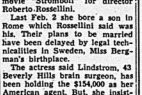
The actress' lawyers filed suit Wednesday against Dr. Peter Lindstrom, whom she divorced in Mexico Feb. 9, demanding an accounting of personal and community property and custody of their child, Pia.

Miss Bergman, 34, demanded $154,000 (after taxes) which she said she earned in making the movie "Stromboli" for director Roberto Rossellini.

Last Feb. 2 she bore a son in Rome when Rossellini said was his. Their plans to be married have been delayed by legal technicalities in Sweden, Miss Bergman's birthplace.

The actress said Lindstrom, 43 Beverly Hills brain surgeon, has been holding the $154,000 as her American agent. But, she insisted, he has no right to it because it was earned after she left him more than a year ago.

She also demanded her interest in two films still being exhibited, "Joan of Arc" and "Under Capricorn."



The actress asked for a division of community property, Wednesday, including their home here, three automobiles, jewelry, furs, life insurance and $29,000 in government bonds.

Miss Bergman now is in Italy. Her daughter, Pia, has been in Lindstrom's care since Miss Bergman left to work for Rossellini a year ago. Lindstrom has indicated he will ignore the Mexican divorce and take action in California courts.

In the suit, Miss Bergman described herself as "a fit and proper person to have the care, custody and control of Pia. She said the Mexican decree made no disposition of property or custody of the child.

Churchill Calls For Secret Defence Session

London, March 17 — (CP) — Prime Minister Attlee, victorious in the last week in three motions of non-confidence against his new Labor government, Thursday night shrugged off a motion by Winston Churchill for a secret parliamentary session on Britain's defences.

The suggestion came during debate on defence estimates, which were put forward in a white paper by Defence Minister Emanuel Shinwell, outlining Britain's £780,000,000 ($2,428,000,000) military budget for the year beginning April 1.

There was no question of a vote of confidence on this government presentation, however, despite an amendment moved by a pacifist Labor member, Emrys Hughes, which expressed regret at the increased spending on armaments "at a time when the discovery of the atom bomb and hydrogen bomb has revolutionized modern warfare."

At the end of the debate, the white paper was accepted by the House without a call for a vote.

Churchill, in his speech on defence session of both the commons and the House of Lords, claimed the government had withheld from Parliament defence secrets "certainly and obviously" known to Russia.

Mid Attlee, in a remark which pointedly implied that the Conservative leader was "election-eering", replied:

"I don't think a secret session would be particularly helpful, except we might avoid these electioneering speeches."

Winston Warns Britons

Churchill's speech in the defence debate was one of his usually-expected parliamentary appearances. He warned Britons:

"Do not nurse foolish delusions that you have any other overall effective shield at the present time from enemy attack than the atom bomb in the possession, thank God, of the United States of America.

"Let us therefore labor for peace, not only by insuring our defence in strength but also by making sure that no door is closed to any hope of reaching a settlement in this tragic period, when two worlds face one another in increasing strain and anxiety."

But the Prime Minister, too, was in good voice. He told the House:

"I think people delude themselves if they think you can get rid of the menace of the atomic bomb by some kind of Queensberry rules applied to warfare. I think it does depend on the will to peace, and that is what we have been working on.

"We must stick to the United Nations organization. It is our hope to build on it."

Suffers Head Cut

Welland, March 16—(CP)—Veteran Mayor, 21, of Hamilton escaped with a fractured skull after he was thrown out of a car which was struck by a Canadian National Railways yard engine at a crossing in Crowland township Wednesday. Maye was a passenger in an auto driven by Leonard Wolley, 24, of Hamilton, who escaped injury.

60,000 TIRES DESTROYED

Kansas City, March 16 — (AP) — Fire last Wednesday destroyed a four-storey Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company warehouse with an estimated loss of $2,300,000. The flames jumped across the street to a Firestone factory building containing more than 2,000,000 units of rubber, tires and lap and paper bag material, but were controlled quickly by them. An estimated 60,000 rubber tires were destroyed in the warehouse.

Churchill Calls For Secret Defence Session

London, March 17 — (CP) — Prime Minister Attlee, victorious in the last week in three motions of non-confidence against his new Labor government, Thursday night shrugged off a motion by Winston Churchill for a secret parliamentary session on British defences.

The suggestion came during debate on defence estimates, which were put forward in a white paper by Defence Minister Emanuel Shinwell, outlining Britain's £780,000,000 ($2,428,000,000) military budget for the year beginning April 1.

There was no question of a vote of confidence on this government proposition, however, despite an amendment moved by Churchill. Labor member, Emrys Hughes, which expressed regret at the increased spending on military needs "in the absence of discovery of the atom bomb and the hydrogen bomb but a revolutionized modern warfare."

At the end of the debate, the white paper was referred to the House without a call for a vote. Churchill moved for a secret defence session of both the commons and the House of Lords. He said: "Important matters are withheld from Parliament defence secrets very unduly and obviously known to Russia."

Mr. Attlee, in a remark which pointedly indicated that the Conservative leader was "electioneering" replied:

"I don't think a secret session would be particularly valuable, except we might avoid these electioneering speeches."

Winston Warns Britons

Churchill's speech in the defence debate was one of his usually-expected parliamentary oratorical efforts. He warned Britons:

"Do not nurse foolish delusions that you have another overall effective shield at the present time from mortal danger than the atom bomb in the possession, thank God, of the United States of America.

"Let us therefore labor for peace, not only by insuring our defence in strength but also by making sure that no door is closed to any hope of reaching a settlement in this tragic period, when two worlds face one another in increasing strain and anxiety."

But the Prime Minister, too, was in good voice. He told the House:

"I think people deluge themselves if they think you can get rid of the menace of the atomic bomb by some kind of Queensberry rules applied to warfare. I think it does depend on the will to peace, and that is what we have been working on.

"We must stick to the United Nations organization. It is our hope to build on it."

Suffers Head Cut

Welland, March 16—(CP)—Vernon Mayo, 21, of Hamilton escaped with a deep head cut when he was thrown out of a car which was struck by a Canadian National Railways yard engine at a crossing in Crowland township Wednesday. Mayo was a passenger in an auto driven by Leonard Wolsey, 24, of Hamilton, who escaped injury.

60,000 TIRES DESTROYED

Kansas City, March 16 — (AP) — Fire last night destroyed or damaged a four-storey Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company warehouse with an estimated loss of $2,300,000. The flames jumped across the street to a nine-storey factory building containing more than 1,000,000 pounds of rubber. Scrap lap and paper bag material, but were controlled quickly there. An estimated 60,000 tires and tubes were destroyed in the warehouse.

Dude College

By Oren Arnold

"Oh! Oh yes, Andre. Sure, how are you son? Well, well, well! You've followed her out here! How are you?"

"Fine Mr. Bailey. I hope you don't mind if I do drop in to see Ronica."

"Oh no. Nope. Wouldn't do any good if I did. Ronnie sees anybody she wants to see. Saw a lot of you in New York, didn't we? Heh-heh!" Mr. Bailey felt like teasing a little. "When you coming out to the ranch?"

"Well sir, I wanted to come Saturday—that's tomorrow. There is a dance tomorrow night. College dance. I hoped maybe Ronica would—"

"Sure, sure, Andre! Come on! Know Ronica will be glad to see anybody from back home. She's not too much at home yet in this wild country. I imagine. She'll be tickled to go to the dance with you, of course!"

Andre was definitely pleased. He had wanted a date and he had wanted to insure what he hoped were cordial relations with Ronica's dad; all this had come to him at once. In fact practically everything had come his way since he left the east. He felt very confident. All he had to do was move slowly cautiously, build thoroughly and pretty soon his business as well as his personal plans would all materialize.

On Saturday he was downtown again, hoping to see either Ronica or the other cow girl named Monioya. He wanted somehow to arrange a logical meeting with the girl using the crutch.

He had received instructions to contact this person at once, and he had already been in town almost a week. Still, he had been told to move with discretion, too. He knew it would never do to rush in carelessly. The whole fate of a nation—if one looked at it that way—hung on his or her undercover activity here; but more important, his personal pleasure and fortune was at stake.

He didn't see either Ronica or Miss Monioya downtown. He telephoned the Rocking R ranch again Saturday afternoon, but neither Ronnie nor her father was in. He went, somewhat in boredom to a theatre, then after dinner in a cafe drove back to his own dude ranch to dress for the night's dance.

As he dressed he whistled in mounting anticipation. He would see Ronica again—even hold her in his arms for a moment. He was a powerful frame. Weight right at 200 pounds. Good muscles—not to be scoffed at in his work—and a perfect polish in manner, too, he told himself.

It was just after 9 p.m. when headlights of his sleek, almost silent new coupe picked up a sign on the highway. "Rocking R Ranch, Turn Here," it read. He made the turn and almost immediately had to slow down for an elderly and rather rattly sedan ahead of him. Impatiently he touched his horn.

The car ahead couldn't pull out of the narrow trail and apparently couldn't speed up. Andre's eight cylinders were wild chargers straining at their bits. He looked out in distaste.

They swerved into the big loop beside the ranch house porch. Andre saw that the house was a massive thing of rocks and logs. He was appraising it in the moonlight, hence not driving with much care, when the rattly sedan stopped beside the front step just ahead of him.

Slap! Crash! Bumpers collided, rather hard.

"Whats the idea?" Andre growled, leaving his seat. "Isn't there a servants' entrance to this place? Now please get that thing away from the door before we come out."

"Oh! Quite so! I—I beg your pardon! I shall gladly pay for any—"

But Andre Girardeau was not listening. Already this ebullient swain had stepped up onto the porch and was walking toward Ronica in the big lighted living room.

Standing in the darkness beside his rattly second-hand sedan Wesley York heard happy greetings and laughter within, and saw everywhere about the ranch the evidence of wealth and aristocratic living. A vital something within him seemed now to be stifled. He very life suddenly sibbing away.

Dr. Woodrow Wesley York, of Bushloe University, had a perfectly genuine Ph. D., degree and a reasonably good salary for a junior faculty member. But no instructor is ever paid very much, and so the rattle-bang type sedan which Wesley owned was in a measure, symbolic. It suggested thrift, but it also suggested need. Right now, beside Andre Girardeau's sleek, new coupe, in front of the elaborate Rocking R Ranch home it looked like a fugitive from a junk yard.

Moreover Andre himself had personified haughty aristocracy when he ordered Wesley off the premises and stepped into Ronica for reading, but habit is strong. He stood there in the darkness a moment, then moved hesitantly to the porch. He heard the obvious pleasure of Ronica in greeting Andre Girardeau and — in sudden panic—was about to flee, but a portly gentleman came out the door and saw him.

"Hey there, how do you do, young man?" The portly one was cordial. "Come in, come right in. My name's Bailey—Ronica's father."

"Uh, York. I am Wesley York."

"Fine, fine, Wesley! Go right in with the other young couple. Ronica always has a crowd around. Dance tonight, isn't there? Yes, that's right, this New York fellow, Andre Girardeau, is escorting Ronica I believe. You riding in with them, no doubt? Fine night to—"

"Why, ah—" Wesley couldn't speak coherently, partly because Mr. Bailey had him by the arm and was genially leading him to the living room door. But, before Ronica saw him, Wesley stopped.

"No-No, Mr. Bailey, I—the fact is, I was just leaving, thanks just the same, I, uh, did come—but I must make another call immediately. Many thanks, sir."

"Oh, all right son. Always feel at home here. Everybody else does."

Wesley almost ran to his old car. He felt surely Ronica must have heard him, but apparently not. Lest he be caught—yet, however, and so subjected to more acute embarrassment, he jabbed at his starter and roared off down the narrow trail again.

Not until he was out of sight of the Rocking R. house did he regain composure and realize his plight. He had thought his date with Ronica a genuine one; She herself had suggested it. But—plainly now, she had just been ridiculing him.

ELEVEN DROWN AS TRAWLER SINKS

Ashton Station Practically Demolished by Freight Car

ALL 40 OF CREW OF EXPLODED NAVY TENDER RESCUED

Pearl Harbor, March 18—(AP) All 40 crew members of the net tender Elder, blackened by fire and blasted by explosion, were rescued yesterday near the United States Navy's mid-Pacific atomic testing area.

The dock landing ship Comstock picked up 26 men from a life boat and rafts at 3:15 (8:15 p.m. EST). They had drifted for a week in shark-infested waters after abandoning the stricken 163-foot Elder.

The destroyer tender Piedmont reached the stricken net tender Elder at 11 p.m. (4 a.m. EST Saturday) and reported the other 14 men were aboard and "all in good shape." The Piedmont also aboard to continue fighting the blaze.

The Elder, with five feet of water in her badly burned engine room, declined help from the Piedmont's crew.

"I can manage my own ship with my own men," said the Elder's skipper, Lieut. William F. Adams of Wilmar, Calif. The Piedmont radioed that the Elder's 14 men were in "very good to excellent condition."

Passed on Monday

Adams said his disabled craft passed up Monday by the military transport Gen. A. W. Brewster despite the Elder's signalling "with everything we had aboard except our three-inch gun." He said the Brewster was only two miles away.

King Confined To His Room With Slight Chill

The King looked fit Friday when, accompanied by the Queen and Princess Elizabeth, he presented shamrock emblems to officers and men of the Irish Guards at a St. Patrick's Day ceremony at Chelsea Barracks, London.

He had planned to leave the palace this today for Sandringham and Princess Margaret to spend the weekend at the Royal Lodge, Windsor.

The King has enjoyed good health since recovery from a circulation ailment in his right leg, which caused him to cancel all public engagements in November, 1948, and postpone the Royal Tour to Australia and New Zealand, planned for last year.

MACLEAN IS GIVEN THREE YEARS FOR MANSLAUGHTER

Prosecution Concurs In Plea for Clemency

Sydney, N.S., March 18 (CP)—Former Mayor Dan Jack MacLean, 63, today was sentenced to three years in penitentiary for manslaughter in connection with the death of his lifelong friend, Sydney Registrar of Voters, Joseph MacKinnon.

The sentence was delivered in a hushed courtroom here today by Chief Justice J. L. Ilsley. On Thursday he had instructed the jury that MacLean could not be found guilty of murder, and the verdict should be either guilty of manslaughter or not guilty. The manslaughter verdict was returned.

When the chief justice delivered the sentence, MacLean, who rose from bellhop to mayor of this steel city, shook his head. He showed no fear the justice's pronouncement.

Clemency Urged by Counsel

Defence counsel Ross MacKinnon had pleaded clemency on the grounds the defendant was already 63 and a long term in penitentiary would be exceedingly difficult for him to re-establish himself. It would be exceedingly difficult for him to re-establish himself. It would be exceedingly difficult for him to re-establish himself. It

TOW TO OPERATE OVER WEEKEND

With the recent fall of "fast" snow officials of the Hastings County Ski Club announced today that the tow at the run north of the village of Frankford will be operating this afternoon and all day Sunday.

MAIN HIGHWAYS CLEARED OF SNOW

Two big Mitchell bombers anchored in direct path of the swirling snow added to the desolate picture as the drifts piled up in the ditches and across the highways.

Early this morning, however, one of the bigger Department of Transport scrapers was clearing the main thoroughfare.

CAR DAMAGED IN COLLISION

Front end damage amounting to approximately $200 resulted last evening to a car driven by Lionel Train, 160 Charles Street, when as result of snow conditions it crashed into the rear of a truck.

Mr. Train, driving west on Station Street during the height of the storm when a hydro truck immediately in front slowed to allow an oncoming vehicle to pass a parked auto, he was unable to stop quickly enough and the front of his car crashed the rear of the truck.

Few Vendors In Evidence On Local Market

Last night's storm put a quietus on the market produce with but a few vendors being in evidence at an early hour.

There were no vegetables, or fruit shown.

Eggs still maintained their price of 45 cents the dozen for Grade A; 40 to 41 cents for Grade A medium, and 36 for Grade A small.

Home cooking was fairly plentiful with delicious pies, individual size, large and medium, being sold at 10, 20, 45 and 50 cents each, apple, chocolate, and berry. Large size layer cakes in banana, chocolate and coconut were 50c each, while cookies were 15, 18, or 24 dozen for 35c; apple squares were 10 cents each, and doughnut squares 6c the dozen. Doughnuts were 40c; fruit cookies, 6 for 35c.

Fancy work was the same as last week. One vendor had sensible hand-knit socks in diamond pattern, made from nylon reinforced wool, in colors of yellow with diamond in rainbow hues, and others in blue with same diamond shades. These sold at $3.50 the pair.

Aprons, children's wear, were in the same prices, as were the doilies, as quoted from week to week. The one exception was the baby wool dress with tiny rosettes in blue satin ribbon was priced at $3.50. This vendor had some, white mitts at 75c, and bootees at 50c.

Fish was not plentiful at the side market, with prices the same as last week, 25 cents a pound for $1 or 25c the pound. Salmon, haddock, were the same price as last week.

Chair Attends School Classes On Bus Runs

When 30 young boys of the Columbus Boys' Choir tumbled out of their bus in front of the Victoria Trust Company offices yesterday afternoon the singing group had completed 7,000 miles of travelling so far this year. The youthful choir came in from Watertown, N.Y., a distance of 103 miles to appear in the Belleville Collegiate Auditorium. The Belleville engagement ends a tour through Canada which brought the singers from the East Coast here.

Each year the Columbus Boys' Choir sings 74 concerts covering U. S. and Canadian cities in a route measuring between 20 and 25 thousand miles. The singers were assembled in Columbus and are sponsored by private donations and remunerations derived from the tour. All of the boys were selected for natural ability to sing and high academic qualities.

Three Teachers

Nor is their education neglected on account of singing engagements. Riding right along with the boys are three registered school teachers. They hold regular classes for the "voices" some times when the bus in in motion but generally when the choir has stopped over in a centre presenting the singers.

Teachers Mrs. R. D. Klayes, Mrs. K. W. Christman and Mr. Robert Slabaugh all agree that the children can take the lessons better since they are given them. "It's not a chore instructing in the aisles of the bus as it weaves and rolls down the highway," remarked Mrs. Klayes.

Like the Winter

The singers chorused their liking for the Canadian winter. In the eastern parts of the country where the temperatures were lower a heavier hat was purchased for each boy. "Ohio gets little snow and the abundance of it here gave them new thrills," explained Mr. Foreman, whose job it is to see that the boys are looked after properly.

The singers are allowed to play in the snow but great care is taken against illness or epidemic.

While appearing in Presqu'ile Maine, recently a mumps epidemic was reported. The choir was bundled up and whisked out of town. The choirmaster still worries as the throat infection sometimes turns up three weeks after contact.

Dr. R. Tennent's Resignation As Member Bd. of Education Accepted at Friday's Meeting

A Member of the local Board of Education for the past three years, Dr. R. W. Tennent has resigned his position owing to the board's learned at their regular monthly meeting Friday evening. Dr. Tennent tendered his resignation on March 3rd, his resignation being formally accepted last night. No reason was given for the resignation by Dr. Tennent to the board.

Arthur L. Burke, last year's member of the board, was unanimously appointed to fill the vacancy caused by Dr. Tennent's resignation. Board member A. C. Wilkins was named to replace Dr. Tennent as chairman of the public school management committee.

The board meeting was a comparatively quiet affair with only six of the nine regular members present. Absent from the meeting were Chairman of the Board, Enos David, George Wishart, and Frank Cushing.

Music Not Discussed

The matter of the board's awarding the contract for the proposed new school in East Belleville was not discussed at the board. It was indicated that the board would make no statement relative to its position in the matter until it had received legal advice from its solicitor.

Officials of the Central Home and School Association, however, signified their confidence in the Board of Education on their action relative to awarding the contract and in a letter to the board expressed their "wholehearted" confidence and support.

Mention was made with respect to a request of the local Kinsmen Club to seek contributions from school children for their proposed community swimming pool fund. The idea of the service club is that contributions from the school children would bring the swimming pool to the attention of parents.

Won't Permit Collections

It was pointed out, however, that it was against the principle of the board to permit collections being made from among the school children.

A new drafting instructor for the collegiate John S. Gluck of Fort William, was hired at a salary of $2,700 per annum. Mr. Gluck is fully qualified for drafting instruction and is highly recommended by the department.

The board administrator L. A. Kells reported that re-wiring on the upper floors of the Queen Mary and Queen Victoria schools was completed with the new lighting fixtures nearly completely installed. Authorization was given by the board for the re-wiring of the upper floor of the Queen Alexandra school, also with the installation of modern lighting equipment.

Adopt Pension Plan

The board formally adopted the pension plan for non-teacher employees with four of the 12 employees affected being reported ready to enter the plan. Participation in the pension plan is optional with the employees but future employees of the board would be required to join the plan. The pension scheme is merely an extension of the plan adopted by city council for its employees last year.

Retirement was given for the payment of an amount of $623.70, the cost of a new storm sewer on Bridge Ave. to serve the new Prince Charles School. Private residence along Bridge Ave. are not being asked to share in the cost of the storm sewer as city officials have stated a sewer would not have been constructed had it not been requested for the new school.

Resignations Accepted

The resignations of Miss Rhea McCullough and Miss Irene Sidey as staff members in city public schools were accepted by the board.

The matter of student leave for farm help this coming season was left to the discretion of the collegiate principal G. E. Currie.

POLICE BLOTTER

There was no indication that it was snowing lumber as well as snow last night when a number of were found last evening in the centre of Highland Ave. The lumber apparently had fallen unnoticed from a passing truck. An obliging motorist picked up the scantling and took them to the police station.

An out of town calendar salesman canvassing the city with veterans' calendars, ran afoul of the law yesterday when a local hotel proprietor claimed he had neglected to pay for his services. He apprehended the man and held him on a vagrancy charge. He gave his name as Bernard McQuaid of Toronto.

Competitive Selling is Back, Newspaper, Magazine Ads Cheapest and Best, Club Told

"Competitive selling days are here again," he said, suggesting that merchants should forget about the heyday when order taking was the main mode of doing business.

In theme with his talk, "Now the customer is the buyer," Mr. Knox announced that the post-war era had arrived. He offered many pointers of salesmanship saying that this is a period when better selling will pay off better and poor selling will bring about more failures.

"Suggest saving money to your customer. Do not embarrass him by trying to force him to buy, and by all means don't try to oversell," added the advertising speaker.

Display Advertising

Mr. Knox said newspaper and magazine advertising was the cheapest and best form of putting merchandise before the customers' eyes. Radio was a good medium also to maintain sales and advertisers are finding that it is the quickest way to sell their products."

Stating that one national publication reached 400,000 Canadian homes and is read by 3,000,000 people, Mr. Knox said the advertising value of this page and brought his goods to the individual prospective customer at a cost of one-fifth of a cent each. This is the "cheapest and most effective salesman available," he told his listeners.

Mr. Knox, indicating that the business men, aware that competitive selling days were here "dressed his remarks in the form of a demonstration of advertising in Canada in 1950.

Research Important

Research is important in advertising a product. The customer wants to know, he said, where, when, how and why? Mr. Knox then concluded his address in a visual demonstration supporting his statements on the benefits of research in advertising.

Calling on the merchants in the audience to abandon cut-throat methods in selling, Mr. Knox stressed increase in the customers' "trust him as an invited guest," he recommended. "Remember, he's got a pay in his pocket."

In tendering the vote of thanks Dick Cowan presented Mr. Knox with a gift of Black Diamond cheese on behalf of the club.

HASTINGS IN ERIN

By LAVONIA STOCKELBACH

The world is round, so travellers tell,
And straight though reach the track,
Trudge on, trudge on, 'twill all be well,
The way will guide one back.

—A. E. Housman.

Ireland is beautiful, but here as elsewhere it is the lives of the people that most attract. Geography, geology, the fertility of the soil increase in interest according as one's knowledge of them increases, but it is what the people have done with their soil and rocks and rivers that counts, their use of the gifts of Nature.

It was a stormy morning in June that the airplane flew me from Belfast across the Irish Sea to London — as a Dublin woman said to me "the only free city in the world." One got a glimpse of the Isle of Man, that place of land Satan bit out of Ulster and dropped into the sea.

There was barely time to put one's impressions in order and this fantastic journey needed sorting out. From Baile-Atha-Cliath (and in case you have forgotten, I shall tell you again, that means Dublin), around Wicklow, Carlow, Cashel, Limerick, out into the wave wilds of Mayo on the Atlantic over to Dungannon and the small Bay of Bangor one gathered unforgettable memories of beautiful bits of country, and at the same time opinions and observations of many different people.

I had asked many questions and no effort was too great to give me the answers. I myself, had been asked many questions but could not always give the answers. Even now when on the airplane I began asking myself questions, the answers were not forthcoming.

The plane had an unpleasant way of taking a dive as if trying to get a good reflexion of herself in the sullen sea and by the time she righted herself, and you found yourself still whole, it took some minutes to get settled to one's thoughts what with the roar of the engine and the uncertainty of arriving on time an airplane is not a place for thinking. Only one thing stood out clearly after all these Irish contacts and statistics and Gustave le Bon has put it well — "The progress of a people depends neither on governments nor revolutions, but by the sum of the efforts of the individuals." And again the words written a hundred years ago by Thackeray emphasize how early in the life of a nation the individual gives the keynote to its character.

It was precisely my own judgment though I had never before artist but to a lover of neatness and comfort it is just hideous and inexcusable, and the surrounding flowers give one a moment of happiness. The ruins one sees everywhere in Eire really meant evidences of Norman magnificence, brought down by the wars between the ambitious Butlers and Geraldines and the disasters brought on by Cromwell.

Indian Head, Sask. (CP) — A farmer's wife was a bit late in getting to hospital here for the birth of her child. The child, a son, was born in a closed, heated cutter during a 13-mile race from the farm home to Indian Head. Only casualty was the father, who suffered frostbite when he rode on the outside of the cutter.

Stories from The Bible

Samson

Editor's note: This is the fourth in a series of studies from the Old Testament. The text is condensed from selections by Houston Harte for the new book "In Our Image." Illustration by Guy Rowe is also from the book.

And the Philistines had dominion over Israel. And Samson went and caught three hundred foxes, and took fire brands, and turned tail to tail, and put a firebrand in the midst between two tails. And when he had set the brands on fire, he let them go into the standing corn of the Philistines, and burnt up the shocks, and also the standing corn, with the vineyards and olives. Then the Philistines said, Who hath done this? And they answered, Samson.

Then the Philistines went up and spread themselves in Lehi. And Samson came unto Lehi, and the spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and he found a new jawbone of an ass, and put forth his hand, and took it, and slew a thousand men therewith.

And it came to pass afterward, that he loved a woman in Sorek, whose name was Delilah. And the lords of the Philistines came and said to her, Entice him, and see wherein his great strength lieth and by what means we may prevail against him, and that we may bind him to afflict him: and we will give thee every one of us eleven hundred pieces of silver.

Delilah said to Samson, Tell me, I pray thee, wherein thy great strength lieth, and wherewith though mightiest be bound to afflict thee. And Samson said, If they bind me with seven green withs that were never dried, then shall I be weak as another man. Then the lords of the Philistines brought up to her seven green withs which had not been dried and she bound him.

And she said, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he brake the withs, as a thread of tow is not known. And Delilah said unto Samson, thou has told me lies: now tell me, I pray thee, wherewith thou mightest be bound. And he said, If they bind me fast with new ropes, then shall I be weak, and be as another man. Delilah therefore took new ropes and bound him. And he brake them from off his arms like a thread.

And Delilah said, How canst thou say, I love thee, when thine heart is not with me? And she pressed him daily and urged him so that his soul was vexed unto death, that he told her all his heart and said, There hath not come a razor upon mine head; if I be shaven, my strength will go from me.

And when Delilah saw that he had told her all his heart, she called for the lords of the Philistines. And she made him sleep upon her knees; and she called for a man to shave off the locks of his head; and his strength went from him.

And the Philistines took him and put out his eyes, and bound him with fetters of brass; and he did grind in prison. Howbeit the hair of his head began to grow again. Then the lords of the Philistines gathered together to rejoice. And when their hearts were merry they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us sport. And they called for Samson out of the prison house, and he made them sport; and they set him between the pillars. And Samson said to the lad that held him by the hand, Suffer me that I may be avenged of the Philistine house standeth, that I may lean upon them.

Now the house was full of men and women; and all the lords of the Philistines were there; and there were upon the roof about three thousand men and women.

And Samson called upon the Lord, and said, O Lord God, strengthen me, I pray thee, that I may be venged of the Philistines for my two eyes.

And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars upon which the house stood, and he bowed himself with all his might; and the house fell upon all the people that were therein. So the dead which he slew at his death were more than they which he slew in his life. Then his brethren and all the house of his father came down, and took him, and brought him up, and buried him in the burying place of his father.

IMPRESSIVE TRIAL SCENE

One of the most impressive trials in Canadian history has closed as Albert Guay of Montreal was convicted of the murder of his wife, a passenger on an airliner which exploded in the Quebec countryside when twenty-two other persons besides Mrs. Guay met death. Guay was found guilty of the atrocious deed by having had a time bomb placed aboard the airliner. It was brought out in evidence that Guay had had his wife's life insured for $10,000 for an air journey.

The scenes in the court were among the most impressive in the history of Canadian trials. Chief Judge Albert Sevigny wept as he concluded his address to the jury.

The eyes of the world were on that court room throughout the trial, especially when the jurors undertook their grave duty to decide on the guilt or innocence of the accused. But seventeen minutes were required to decide that momentous question.

Everything about that trial took on an impressiveness which was felt not only in the courtroom but across the country and continent. The great issues of life were there being decided of justice, safety and protection of life. A man was being tried for a capital crime. The judge spoke words as if they were those of a prophet of old as he gave sad to the jury, "The law of God and her country gave Mrs. Guay the right to live. Nothing escapes the law of God. You have to fulfil the law of your country."

CAR SUSPENSIONS

Last year 12,613 motorists had their driving licences suspended in Ontario of which 4,765 were for careless driving, 3,000 were for drunken driving. There were 36 cars seized whose owners persisted in driving despite suspension, says Ottawa Journal, and these were sold by tender by the Department of Highways.

"A majority of the suspensions were for unsatisfied judgments. In such cases cash, securities, or a bond to the value of $11,000, was required before the person responsible was allowed to drive again, a stiff condition for many to fulfil. Many persons involved found it extremely difficult to get ordinary insurance, as most car insurance firms have become very choosy. In some cases special insurance has been secured at a higher premium.

"This is a section of the Ontario Highway Act which few motorists are familiar with. Owing to the ever-increasing costs of automobile insurance many drivers take a chance and do without public liability coverage. Some others cannot obtain it from regular companies. Yet if any of these are in an accident, and blame is placed on them, they may find themselves in an extremely difficult position. Putting up $11,000 is not always so easy.

"Interesting in the Department's report is the fact that 385 drivers lost their right to operate a car because of physical disabilities. In other words it was discovered, after a licence had been issued, that they were not competent to be in charge of a car. There appears the real weakness of the Ontario act. It depends too much on hindsight, takes all the precautions after an accident has happened."

MODERN GADGETS

Electricity and modern man certainly have made some amazing strides since grandpa was a young fellow. What would the old boy think, for instance, if he was still alive and could see junior shaving with an electric razor, an electric shaver you plug into the wall and then run over your face? Of what would he say if he saw the cook washing dishes with an electric washer, or whipping cream in an electric mixer or cooking on an electric stove? He'd probably get used to it just as he undoubtedly would get accustomed to the electric lawn mowers, electric floor polishers and electric trains.

What would probably drive the old fellow crazy though are these new fangled devices called electric blankets and electric sheets. Can you imagine grandpa climbing into bed without his hot brick or hot water bottle these cold winter nights? Can you imagine him trusting a single little white sheet or one blanket to keep warm all night? No sir, he wouldn't. That's where he'd draw the line.

Knowledge is the treasure but judgment is the treasurer of a wise man. — Penn.

Heaven in sunshine will requite the kind. — Bryon.

A GISH

Can you tell me what's a "gish?"
Would you say it's fowl or fish?
Were one right before your eyes,
Would a "gish" you recognize?

If I asked you: "What's a "gish"?"
Would you say a Chinese dish?
Has it feathers, beak and wing?
Can it fly and sweetly sing?

Files in summer will it swish?
Would you bet upon a "gish?"
Ignoramus! You admit
That you've never heard of it?

Little Terry, only two,
Knows a whole lot more than you.
And, I learned it at the knee
Of my precious one. "Gish" is what he calls a horse

Science Destroys Dread Tsetse Fly Zululand Scourge

Durban, South Africa, March 18 (CP)— Forty patient, industrious men from various governments despatched on windup and Zululand battle against the tsetse fly which, five years ago, held undisputed sway over 1,000 square miles of territory from the Tugela River in South Africa to Portuguese East Africa and brought death to thousands of expensive cattle.

For two hours every morning a helicopter, flying over the Hluhluwe Game Reserve, sprays benzine hexa-chloride over the remnants of the tsetse fly army.

The victory was achieved by science and intelligent men who knew that the only way to destroy the tsetse fly was to find and eradicate the tsetse fly carrier.

They hacked their way through the dense bush near the Black-umfolozi River and set up research quarters.

Then, following months 250 miles of track had to be cut through the bush to enable them to get at all the corners and likely breeding spots.

Over-head, net traps were laid over hundreds of square miles. Each trap was made to be easily collected and the millions of flies counted and the traps reset. Each trap was marked on the map and the breeding places shown in the thickest areas were charted.

Attack Deadly

It was found that the tsetse flies were not attracted to any protected animals in the game reserves.

The eradication began with ground spraying, but it was not long before it was found that the flies suffered wholesale extinction.

At Mkuzi in December, 1946, 200 traps collected 8,000 flies. Three months later the 200 traps and three months later the trap toll was 1,200 flies. Then the helicopter hexa-chloride spray reduced the catch to 116, and later it was found that only 16 flies were caught eight months ago. The same thing happened in Coffee-cocoli.

The hilly Hluhluwe district offered the greatest problem. It was not until the helicopter was used that the tsetse flies could be taken out of every gully and crevice. They were killed so effectively that in ——— only two flies were collected from 500 traps.

The veterinary department of the soil conservation department —which cleared a 100-mile belt 15 miles of the Intombe river to serve of bush—the native affairs department and the S.A.F. have all combined in this enormous undertaking.

India Encourages Foreign Visitors

Steps being taken by the government to encourage foreign tourist travel, including modification of visa and custom formalities, were announced recently by the minister of state for railways, K. Santhanam. It is hoped, he said, that all avoidable inconvenience to tourists.

Special attention was being devoted to the problems of food, drink and accommodation. Consideration for tourists both at ports of entry and at centres likely to attract them. Railway facilities were being improved and preparation of guide books and tourist literature was under way.

A special subcommittee section is being set up and assistance of the United Nations Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East was being sought to get expert advice on various tourist problems.

Discover Traces Of Civilization 5,000 Years Old

Karachi (Reuters) — Archaeologists digging on the site of the ancient Indus Valley city Mohenjo-Daro have found the remains of a sewage system they believe dates back more than 3,000 years B.C.

Working under the direction of one of Britain's best known archaeologists, Dr. Mortimer Wheeler, archaeological adviser to the Pakistan governement, students have unearthed underground brick defences around the fortress of a citadel which may yield new secrets of a fascinating civilization buried under the sand and rasarlak bushes of the Sind Desert, 200 miles northeast of Karachi.

The site was first discovered in 1921 and from remains uncovered so far, thought to date from 2,500-1,500 B.C.

Dr. Wheeler said recently that he was "more than satisfied" with traces of a civilization older than even those of Mesopotamia and Egypt.

So far the excavations have uncovered one street about 30 feet wide and over a mile long revealing an extensive drainage system.

First Sign of Defences

The fortress is the first sign of any kind of defence for the civilization found in the valley.

Mohenjo-Daro is the earliest relic of Indian civilization so far found.

High mounds upon which a Buddhist monastery has been built in more modern times were found to be the first archaeological remains to be the remains of a fortress.

A spokesman for the Pakistan office of government archaeology said that below these defences earlier levels of the city go down to an unknown depth.

"The origins of the Indus Valley civilization are about to be represents, have never yet been identified and much remains to be discovered in regard to the beginnings of this prehistoric civilization," the Pakistan, he said.

"The present water level, higher than in ancient times, will be reached shortly, but work will continue with the aid of powerful pumps."

Police, Firemen Donate Blood To Save Farmer

Peterborough, March 18 (CP) — Three city policemen and two firemen donated blood Thursday night to help save the life of Roy Fife, young farmer of nearby Indian Town, who was injured Thursday when pinned under a 2½ ton truck falling from his father's farm.

Fife is believed suffering a broken back and internal injuries. Some ribs were torn away from his spine.

Fife, with his father, was cutting a forked tree with a saw, nearly cut through the two trunks split going in separate directions. The son pulled the tree free to jump and was hit himself by a crushed limb and pinned to the ground.

Strength for the Day

SWITCH TO EXERCISE

Many a man complains about his minister and declares that he has received no help from church when he goes, the minister does not give him any real spiritual food.

The truth of the matter is that what such Christian need is not more spiritual food but more exercise. They are like folks who have filled up on a big turkey dinner and then spend the next hour or three complaining the about how wretched they feel. In both cases, what they need to do is work off some of that food which is now glutting their spiritual and physical arteries. The man who complains about the fact that he does not have adequate spiritual food needs to go out and work off some of the food which we set before him the last time he attended church and of which, unconsciously perhaps, he partook. He should go out into the walk like areas where people are in need. He ought to peel off his coat and set up a good record by lugging from certain shoulders, or defeating the Lord's path way of the great stones of injustice, hate and dishonesty which have been piled there during the wickedness and perversity of men.

If you are complaining about the spiritual diet you get every Sunday, switch to a little exercise for a change and see if you don't feel better.

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

With Easter nigh, the florist shops and greenhouses are now in a sort of floral frenzy. We may take another moment, this time of year, from the fact that however hard-boiled the world is growing, it still clings to flowers.

But visitors to Canadian cities are always stuck by the absence of flower vendors on the streets. This absence may be due to the activities of the police; if so, it would be interesting to see some old flower peddler enter suit against the flower shops under the combines act for restraint of trade. That old peddler would rouse a number of friends.

For in most of the great cities of the world, street vendors of flowers add a quality of tenderness to the scene that antique spires and quaint facades cannot altogether infuse. In London, the flower girls are not the only vendors: barrows travel the highways and byways, laden with daffodils, roses, nosegays. In Washington, when the first crocus pushes break homeward, all along the curbs stand men, young and old, girls, with baskets bursting with flowers of the season, selling them like hot cakes to the scattered hordes. In Paris, you meet an aged Apache around any corner, selling evilly, but vending lovely flowers. When you come near the Madeleine at Easter, great flower wagons as well as barrows and basketeers, hurl flowers at you. A few pennies a massive bough, to take in for the saints: for me, Saint Joan.

In Pest, dark, fat men hustle the flowers. In Berlin, fat, gold girls. In San Francisco, old women. And in New Orleans, negroes. But in Canada, mostly, you go for flowers the way you go for a pound of butter. Flowers should challenge you, on the pavements, in the cold sharp cities.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

ON MISSING THE FAMILIAR

Memories wrap us within their folds, and tighten with the years. Each day we are created and lost grow more precious to us because of the intimacy we have created within us, but the hunger for their companionship remains.

In the beginning process, created by circumstances, is felt not only to-ward those of our kind, but toward many a material thing. A child that has given attention to an interesting item about Kant, the noted philosopher, of course, is told that he should not continue his philosophy lecture when he finds that the family cat seems to be missing from the coat of one of his statuettes. It had been there at the same place for so long that he became accustomed to depend upon it.

The friend who wrote me about this Kant item had just lost his Dalmatian dog, the companion of his wife and himself for 16 years. He now buried under his favorite tree near their window. Said he: "We fondly think that dogs are condi-tioned to us by their habits and adjustments: we forget that they also condition and shape us."

The character of an entire community seems changed when some noted landmark is removed. We come to expect that some things were meant to be taken away, but that when they are gone some-thing fails to give child-like.

But life, however, is largely a matter of adjustment. If "there were not continual changes about us, most of them affecting us to a degree, we would not become static in our ideas and ways of life. Changes stimulate us and help us to grow. Even when they bring sorrow they help us grow more conditioned we may have become to their coming.

Memories, however, remain. The vacant chair is hallowed with the invisible shadow of them. We can no more escape them than we can the tread of our feet. Every day of our lives examples of memories touch our senses. At such times, I believe, God calls upon us to take a new hold on faith—and always to go on!

GOOSE-GREASE AND WHAT HAVE YOU

When you and I were young, it was common practice to rub the goose-grease on the chest either with or without some aromatic substance such as turpentine. The idea behind this procedure was that in the event of a "cold," or "bronchitis," the goose-grease in some manner oozed into the lungs and arriving there did something, because of its greasiness, which caused the trouble to disappear.

Well, let's see. Suppose the goose-grease did ooze through the skin and other structures overlying the bronchial tubes and lungs and gained access to the small tubes and air-cells—what would it do? Those tubes and air-cells do with gobs of grease which were forced into the functioning tissues? And supose that some aromatic substance such as turpentine or eucalptus was actually carried along with the grease, what would the function-ing tissues do with these substances?

I do not recall that either in the good old days or now anyone has ever seen any definite data as to what actually happens to the respiratory apparatus in the case of this silly business. One thought advanced was that the grease "oiled up" the bronchial tubes. It is known that the introduction of oily substances into the bronchial tubes has caused pneumonia. I do not know of any scientific evidence either old or new that the introduction of oil or grease into the bronchial tubes ever remedied anything.

Of course, it is impossible for oil or grease, rubbed on the chest to permeate the intervening structures and reach the bronchial tubes. It is equally impossible for any aromatic substance to gain access to the respiratory apparatus by permeating the chest wall. If, for any outlandish reason, such an effect were desired, it would, to say the least, be an awfully hard way to go about it.

If it were deemed desirable or necessary to introduce oil or grease into the bronchial tubes, the easiest and most effective method would be to "shoot" it in directly—through the throat. Liquid contrast substances are commonly employed in this manner for X-ray examination of the bronchial tubes. Any doctor who would suggest that these substances be introduced into the bronchial tubes the hard way—by first rubbing them on the chest—would probably find his colleagues gently escorting him to a padded cell.

While goose grease and turpentine are no longer as popular in this respect as they used to be, the public today nevertheless seeks less keeps more than one drug firm prosperous by smearing various kinds of fancy-named preparations on the chest with the original idea—fuzzy as it is—in mind. These substances the pub-lic is told "penetrate deeply." Well they do, in the sense of fact —but just suppose they did! What of it? What use would it be?

"At the first sign of a cold, rub Fluff Tiger Ointment on your chest," the ad reads. Surprisingly hordes of people do it. The procedure is not entirely devoid of value. It provides the geek with a slight amount of exercise which won't hurt him a bit.

Some of the purveyors of these "remedies" suggest that some of the remedy (if any is left) be also pushed to the genitals. This, they aver, will "clear the head," and "soothe the passages." Any such "clearing" or "soothing" is caused by a mild anesthetic effect common to such substances as thymol, oil of wintergreen and other useless aromatics. This effect is sometimes described as "refrigerent" in that a sense of coolness is often noted for a moment or two following its use. The only thing that is affected or changed is sensation — nothing more.

I suppose it is harmless enough for any full grown geek with nothing better to do—to smear himself with some of these magic messes—and go around smelling like a football locker-room. But what an atrocity it is to smear a poor defenceless child in like manner, wrap him in a heavy blinder, keep heavy bedclothing upon him, shut the window tight and then sit around waiting for the "ingredients" to do their work! (The "ingredients" are claimed to "work" in seven or eight different ways you know).

Only geese—Aw, well, see you next week.

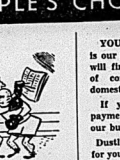
QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Motherhood Unwanted

I think I am going to be a mother, is there anything I can do to make sure this will not happen? (M.W. A.C.)

Answer—Are you serious? If so, I must request in reading it that you know that it is a criminal offence to aid or advise anyone in an effort to destroy a birth of a life already started! You floor me when a doctor says have your baby. Don't ever dare to think of anything different — ever. I won't space here to express my shock.

Orange Juice, Egg and Asse



You may be interested to know that carbon-monoxide now clears my face of acne which I used for years. Orange juice combined with a beaten raw egg a good food combination? (I.C.)

Answer—In expert hands carbon dioxide "snow" is quite effective in the treatment of obstinate acne. Any food healthful in itself is healthful in combination with any other healthful food. There is no reason why the above should not be used if you like it.

Sidney Area Bd. Visits Schools

Last week the members of the Sidney Area Board visited the eighteen schools of the area. Mr. D. Houston was unable to accompany them due to pressure of business. Beginning at Belcroft school they visited Avondale, Bayside and Quinteview in the morning. A list of items for consideration at each school had been prepared. These were noted and discussed along with any other suggestions made by the teachers. Each classroom was visited where the members were introduced to the pupils and given an opportunity to see the work being carried on by pupils. In the afternoon Glen Miller, Johnstown, Harder's and Hogle's schools were visited in that order.

Next day the board met at Centenary school and after visiting it, proceeded to Mapleview and Wallbridge. At Mapleview, Miss Pitman was conducting a music lesson. March Hill, Turner's and Eggleton's were the next in order. The afternoon tour took in River Valley, Glen Ross, Riverside and Meadowdale.

On the whole the board was well pleased with the condition of most of the schools but at others a good deal of repair and redecorating is still necessary. Most of the wood had been delivered and plans were made to have it cut as soon as possible. A summary of points noticed on these visits will form the basis for repairs, redecorating, etc., for the coming year.

Grant Higher In Sidney Area

The Sidney School Area Board met at Wallbridge for their regular meeting on March 13th. All members were present.

As this was the first meeting since the new legislature grant schedule had been received, some time was taken considering it. Under the new schedule on the basis of $300 per former section, Sidney School Area will receive a special area grant of $4,200 this year. This is an increase of almost $1,800 over the $2,417 received as a special grant last year. The regular grant on number of pupils, teachers' salaries and new equipment will be somewhat higher, bringing this year's total grant to approximately $27,000. Unless too many unforseen expenses occur the board felt that the school rate for the year could be lowered in view of the extra area grant. It is planned to draw up the budget at the next meeting of the board.

The matters arising out of the boards visits to the schools were dealt with. Each member was given a copy of the various points noted at each school. Urgent matters were dealt with, while outdoor repairs and redecorating will be considered at a later meeting.

The large enrolment at Avondale and Bayside prompted the board to have the supervising principal make a survey of the possible school enrolment for the next few years. A committee was also formed to investigate the feasibility of having a small pipe line run from the highway main to supply the Avondale school with a sufficient water supply. Also in the event an extra room were added, a larger supply than present would be necessary.

Readers To Be Purchased

As a start to supplying the lower grades with sufficient reading material the board decided to allow the teachers up to $15 each at present to purchase readers and reference books to supplement the ones they already have. A set of the Book of Knowledge is to be purchased to replace the set stolen from the Marsh Hill school last fall.

Farm Forum

Foxboro Farm Forum met on Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gay with 21 members present. Mr. George Cooper was discussion leader for the evening. After the broadcast three groups were formed to study the topic "Can we farm co-operatively?"

The first question "Only a very small percentage of Canadian farmers operate land or machinery on an original co-operative plan. Why is this so?" brought much discussion. In this area the farms are all privately owned (have been for years) and everyone has their own machinery. The group felt that the lack of education on co-operative farming may be an important factor too, in many parts of the country. There are a few machines such as ensilage cutters, threshers used co-operatively in the district.

To the second question "Would it be to the advantage of a young man wanting to start farming with limited capital, to join in a co-operative farming scheme?" The answer is yes, as he would have use of a full line of machinery with much less money invested.

Question three was "are there any farming operations in your community that would be better done co-operatively?" Silo filling and threshing are done already co-operatively. The harvesting of hay could be done more efficiently if done co-operatively.

Mrs. Gay served lunch and Mrs. Cooper and Mrs. DeMille served refreshments and a social hour was enjoyed.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Campbell on March 20.

MELROSE

Melrose—Melrose Farm Forum met on Monday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Laufer with Mr. Bernard Hollinger of Foxboro as guest.

The broadcast dealt with the subject "Can We Farm Co-operatively?" Differing opinions were expressed on the topic, much depended on personal preference, but all agreed that co-op farming could be carried out more successfully in western Canada than here. Farms there are of larger acreage and young farmers can group in a community centre and have many conveniences in their homes. Too much isolation sometimes causes the young to leave the farm. In co-op farming the capital investment for machinery is less than for individual farming, maintenance on same is less, so there is an economy to be gained.

On the other hand, in this district, farms are smaller, farmers are mostly men of all ages and the established farmer prefers to have complete control over his own farming operations. The young farmer is naturally individualistic and co-op farming might tend to lessen his ambition.

There is a danger that the more ambitious farmer will lose his incentive to do his best and will in time, just measure up with the average.

The forum believes it is still a long way from the time when the farmer will give up his individualism.

Mr. Hollinger explained very fully co-op insurance and hospitalization.

The hostess served refreshments and a social hour was enjoyed by all.

Columbus Boys' Choir Displays Marked Talent in Fine Program

By EUGENE LANG

Even though Old Man Winter did his best in blanketing this district with one of the heaviest snowfalls of the entire season, it was still not enough in volume to keep the hundreds of "regulars" at home that attended concerts given by the Belleville Community Concert Association. Friday night saw for the final concert of the 1949-50 series a thronged auditorium at the Belleville Collegiate who came to hear the Columbus Boys' Choir.

This famous choir which hails from Columbus, Ohio, is gaining for itself wide renown on this continent as one of the finest of its kind. The thirty boys who appeared here are of a group of 110 that attend the interdenominational school bearing that name, having passed the necessary examinations as to general quality, musical ability, and character excellence to gain admittance to this institution. Thirty boys of the most promising type are taken each year to form a choral from the hundreds that apply, and receive special training in courses while enrolled, besides a sound musical education.

School Started in 1940

The school was opened in 1940 by Mr. Herbert Hunter, a graduate of the famous Westminster Choir School of New York, receiving his backing by several public spirited citizens of Columbus. Ever since then he has been its musical director, and has seen it shaped into its present high calibre form, resulting in regular concert tours and radio appearances that are gaining for the choir a finer reputation from year to year.

Attired in black and white cassocks the boys began their concert here in music of an ecclesiastical leaning composed by famous names of the Renaissance period. The three numbers given, "Ascendit Deus" (Jacob Handl), "Kyrie Eleison" (Antonio Lotti), and "Fac ut ardeat cor meum" from the "Stabat Mater" of Pergolesi all showed to a marked degree the fine training that these young lads have had in that their part singing was meticulously phrased and all voices blended evenly and clearly in a perfect tonal balance. Six carols of the modern English composer, Benjamin Britten from his "Ceremony of Carols", were splendidly sung, each depicting various moods. However, this writer has yet to hear anything by Britten that is pleasing to the ear. In most of his music he seems to be aiming for the expression of an idea that was better left unsaid.

Unusual Presentation

For their next appearance we were swiftly taken back into the time of 18th century aristocratic glamor at its height when the rococco period was in its heyday. "Minuten and Bastienne," a delightful comic opera in one act written by that prolific genius of opera melody, W. A. Mozart, when he was only 12 was the featured vehicle of display of the boys at home that attend concerts given by the Belleville Community Concert Association. Mozart, when he was only 12 was the featured vehicle of display of the boys at home that attend concerts were dressed in the colorful costumes of that period. Every detail, from the satin breeches and powdered wigs of the young gaffer to the pompadoured and hooped skirts of the blushing damsels. To see these boys go through the intricate steps of the minuet, (pity the poor little fellows who had to wear the girls' costumes!!) make all the accustomed bows and curtsies so prevalent during those times, and yet appear so poised throughout the entire affair was something that was amazing to the onlookers.

And the singing—done just as Mozart would have wished it—was sung in that unaffecting but tender manner that brought out the clarity of the music and the pure arias by the three principals along with the soprano in the recitatives, to say nothing of fine supporting by the ensemble. Mr. Hunter at the piano accompanied and gave the piano accompaniments in a very creditable and crisply clear performance, adding much to the overall effect. This joyous morsel of Mozartian melody would endear this choir to everyone who listened—was a petit morceau par excellence.

Popular Numbers

Following intermission the boys appeared in navy blue suits set off with white shirts and ties and sang numbers of varying appeal and more modern trend. The lovely "Ave Maria" of Schubert, the comical "Tee Roo" of Cali Kuhlau, "Sanctus Di Quando" "Echo Song" (using three voices all stags for echo effect), and "Deaf Old Woman" a satirical Mississourian folk song, and a medley of American folk songs from "Oklahoma," "Roberta") were all done extremely well showing the different qualities and capabilities that this talented group possess in regards dynamic shading and sincerity of approach to the spirit of the different arrangements of each selection.

To the most enthusiastic ovations given them the choir responded admirably with no less than six encores from each of divers moods and content.

Many Tuneful Encores

The encores given were "Joshua Fit De Battle of Jericho" (a traditional Negro spiritual; "Welgenlied", cradle song by Mozart; a humorous and satirical imitation of the Don Cossack Choir, complete with the inevitable Russian hip-boot dancer; "Shortnin' Bread", another Southern favorite; a second medley of show tunes and concluding with the "Lord's Prayer" of A. H. Mallotte. All were done in a most inspiring and convincing manner with the exception of the Cradle Song by Mozart, which needed more sustaining tones than was given to make this number really tell as the lullaby that it is.

The gifted young Juilliard scholar, Donald Bryant, played three numbers besides his fine accompanying. Vocal elements in each and every number. Chopin's Etude Op. 25 No. 9 Liszt's 12th Hungarian Rhapsody (Rockocsy March and the Etude Op. 10 No. 5 Study of Chopin were all masterfully played by this brilliant young pianist. Many of the boys were featured as soloists throughout the concert and all did splendidly in the roles expected of them Mr. Huffman is to be warmly congratulated for the results shown here last evening of his dream come true in the person of one and all who participated so capably and efficiently.

Women's Activities

CANNIFTON W.A.

The March dinner meeting of the Canniton Women's Auxiliary was held recently in the Sunday School rooms, which were decorated with large green paper Shamrocks. The tables were prettily done in white with pots of Shamrocks, daffodils, hyacinths and tulips. A St. Patrick's menu was served. The dinner was in charge of Mrs. D. Brenton, Mrs. F. Furmidge assisted by Mrs. Ray Furmidge. At 2:30 p.m., the president, Mrs. H. Farnham, called the meeting together.

After the treasurer's report was given and other discussions, Mrs. J. Willmott read the scripture found in Psalm 64. Mrs. Farnham gave a reading "Keeping Lent". Mrs. Furmidge sang a solo "Have You Been in the Garden With Jesus", accompanied by Mrs. Farnham at the piano. There was a good number out considering the bad weather. All are glad to hear Mrs. W. I. Cole is out of the hospital and a speedy recovery is wished for her, as she is sorely missed. Quilting was the order of the day.

SISTERS ALL

By Jean Love Galloway

If anybody is interested in improving the English generally used in business correspondence and memos, the latest and funniest and most constructive book on it, is called Plain Words. Written by Sir Ernest Gowers as a guide to the British Civil Service, this 100 page soft covered book goes to bat against the clumsy, lengthy, confused writing of government officials . . . Mind you, it has also been distributed to members of the Navy, Army and Air Force over there, and is available now in Canadian bookshops.

Dealing with the comma, this book says that it is in the use of the comma that the differences of opinion among experts are the greatest. On split infinitives, the author quotes a letter Bernard Shaw once wrote to the London Times:

"There is a busybody on your staff who devotes a lot of his time to chasing split infinitives. Every good literary craftsman splits his infinitives when the sense demands it. I call for the immediate dismissal of this pedant. It is of no consequence whether he decides to go quickly or quickly to go or to quickly go. The important thing is that he should go at once."

As for the old rule of never ending a sentence with a preposition, which was invented by Dryden and is now obsolete, the author quotes a marginal comment by Winston Churchill. Opposite a sentence in a war report which clumsily avoided a prepositional ending, the great literary man wrote: "This is the sort of English up with which I will not put."

For student, teacher, business man, soldier, this little paper volume Plain Words is very useful than a dictionary, more helpful than a new style in construction.

Treat your thermostat tenderly. Those women who enjoy the usefulness of an oven regulator should handle the gadget properly. Don't attempt to rush heat into your oven by turning the thermostat way up and then cutting it down.

A thermostat keeps the oven flame at top temperature until it reaches the heat called for, whether it is 200 degrees or 500 degrees. If you turn it to 500, hoping to heat the oven in a hurry, you may forget to reduce it in time.

A thermostat is a sensitive mechanism, and you should occasionally check it for accuracy with an oven thermometer to see if the two correspond.

Incorrect baking temperatures are undoubtedly the biggest single cause of failures in pastry and cake making. If you lack a thermostat, you shouldn't bake pies or cakes unless you have an oven thermometer.

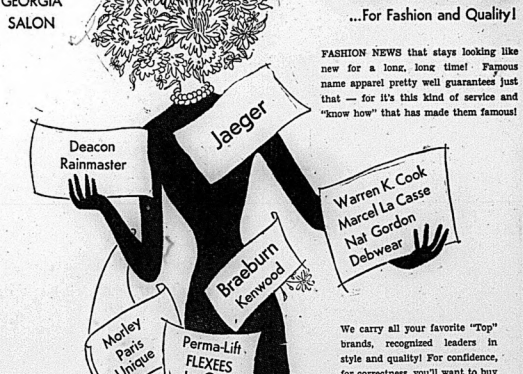
In most recipes a variation in 25 degrees will not ruin the product, but it will change the baking time required.

To make crisp dry meringue shells, you must have a low steady oven temperature of 275 degrees. Egg whites in the recipe should not be cold but should be at room temperature.

Peach Meringue Shells

Place 4 egg whites in a clean mixing bowl. Add 1/4 teaspoon salt. Beat with a rotary egg beater until foamy, that is, until whites have risen but still flow when bowl is tipped.

Sprinkle 1-3 teaspoon cream of tartar on whites. Beat until stiff, that is until whites hold their shape but are not dry looking.



Gradually add 1 cup sifted granulated sugar to egg whites, adding 2 tablespoons at a time, and beating well after each addition. If whites become too stiff for rotary egg beater, use a wire whip.

Grease a cookie sheet lightly. Place lightly greased wrapping paper on cookie sheet. With a tablespoon, form meringue mixture in circles about 3 inches in diameter and about 1 inch high. Place mounds about 1 inch apart on paper.

Bake in a very slow oven. 275 degrees, 45 to 60 minutes or until lightly browned. Remove from paper. Store in dry place.

To serve, place two meringue shells in serving dish with sliced, thawed frozen peaches between shells. Top with sweetened whipped cream.

GOOD MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Salutations . . . to St. Patrick on this great day;
"Oh! St. Patrick was a gentleman,
Who came of decent people;
He built a church in Dublin town
And on it put a steeple."
Saint Patrick, Henry Bennett.

Invite hosts as well as new acquaintances

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:
My sister and I would like to have your settle a heated discussion we are having. Last week she and her husband and my husband and I were invited to a Sunday buffet supper at the home of a mutual friend. At the party were several other couples, one of whom I had never met and I had a wonderful time talking with them. Today I was speaking of it to my sister about my plans to give a buffet supper soon, and mentioned that I would like to invite the couple we met at the buffet supper the Smiths gave. "You're inviting the Smiths, of course?" my sister asked. When I said I hadn't intended to invite them to this particular party, she said that I should invite their at the first time you invite a new acquaintance to a party you must also invite the person or persons through whom you met the acquaintance. I never heard of such a rule. Who is right about this?
Alma B.

Your sister is right, absolutely right, about this . . . and by opening your eyes on this point she undoubtedly has spared you much chagrin. Think how hurt your friends the Smiths would be to hear from their friends that they, the Browns, had been invited to a party you gave while they, the Smiths, were not. Their inevitable reaction "They come to our house, meet our friends, and at once decide to give a party and omit us . . . . what ingratitude, what injustice." So, lady, to this first party invite both the Smiths and the Browns, even if it isn't possible for you to invite anyone else.

Fee to minister for funeral service

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:
At a recent funeral service of a member of our family the minister of a Protestant church conducted the service. We do not know him very well, and we would like to know if it would be proper to give him a fee. If so, should we enclose a money gift with a letter of thanks? And should this be mailed, or delivered to him personally? Who is the one who should write the letter of thanks?
Dorothy

It is customary to give a fee, a money-gift, to the minister who performed the funeral service, whether or not you know him well, and whether or not the family are members of his church. A letter of thanks should be written by the nearest relative of the one who has died (or should be written by someone in the name of the nearest relative). In this letter may be enclosed the fee, in no way which may be handed to the minister, or a cheque or money order may be enclosed with the letter and mailed to him. The letter thanks for the service, and want to thank you very much for your goodness and kindness to us. The service was such a comfort to us all. I am enclosing a cheque which please use in any way you wish, and please know it is sent with our deepest gratitude for your understanding and kindness.
Sincerely,
Dorothy Davis Thompson

How many ushers?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:
How should the prospective bride and groom, as they are planning their wedding, determine the number of ushers they should have in the wedding party?
Helena R.

The number of ushers to have at a church wedding is determined by the number of guests to be invited. (Not, as so many brides think, by the number of bridesmaids.) For every hundred guests invited, there should be at least two ushers.

Club Activities

UNIVERSITY WOMEN'S CLUB

The March meeting of the University Women's club was held at the home of Mrs. J. Grant Sparling on Wednesday evening with Mrs. A. C. Locke presiding.

Plans for the coming Spring Fair and Mandy Macdonald art exhibit were discussed. Also a letter was read from the president of the Canadian Federation of University Women which advised that she, Dr. Marian E. Grant, expected to visit Belleville on the 25th of April and a meeting will be arranged for Dr. Grant, and it is hoped that all the members of the Club will plan to attend the meeting and hear her address.

Mrs. W. Doyle brought in her report of the tea and candy efforts to date to find suitable club rooms, needed because of growing membership.

Mrs. Sparling introduced the guest speaker present.

Mrs. Locke introduced the speaker of the evening, Miss Lemmon, who gave a most interesting account of her trip to Europe taken last summer and fall. Miss Riggs touched lightly on incidents and places visited in England, Italy and Spain, but described in more detail the beauties of France and especially of Paris which is still unique in its beauty and atmosphere.

Miss Nellie Merry extended a vote of thanks to Miss Riggs for her interesting review of her trip with its moments of humor and also its war memories.

Fashion Flashes

PLENTY OF FLOWERS for hat trimmings, despite all the hoop-la about fruit trimmings. Natural Shantung bakou makes a small hat, the rolled brim slanting to one side, with slanted Tyrolean crown. A spray of multi-coloured silk and velvet flowers is worn on the side cheek.

REFRESHING accessories are ready to go with new suits, or to give a fresh look to last year's clothes. Navy silk taffeta, embroidered with bright red dots, is double-breasted and scarf set. The glove has a navy silk jersey palm, while the narrow scarf ends in two wide petals to form an interesting sacot.

A NICE CHOICE for wear with black, navy, gray or brown is the black-and-white nubby tweeds, with fleece as a favorite. Double-breasted coating for a boxy model with big, wide lapels and a boxy back.

DON'T SNOOT the tailored suit fashions of rayon and wear sullings. Such suits are light, smart, good for almost year round wear and are most reasonably priced, considering their fashion appeal and wearability.

Navy Crepe

Smart and effective
By WERA WINSTON

NAVY SHEER crepe is used for a dress that is not as artless as it seems, for despite its simple lines it's smart and very effective. It is pleated from shoulder to hem but fine sleeves that are nothing but just slits at the dropped shoulder. A crisp starched white pique collar forms the base of the V neckline. The contour belt is of the dress fabric and is lined with leather, buckling in front. The pleated skirt is stitched, which helps to preserve the life of the pleats It is shown with a polka dot print hat and gloves, an ideal choice for this blithe young frock.

Good-looks tip for career girls

Says an executive who has many women in his employ: "Certainly I judge by appearance when an applicant for a job comes in here! I have no means of knowing precisely how efficient she is, though she may have good recommendations. I figure that if she isn't smart enough to get herself together neatly ,to have her hair becomingly dressed and her shoes shined and to soft pedal on vivid make-up, she isn't smart enough to work for me, It is no credit to my taste to have dowdy looking women in my establishment."

Think it over, job-seeker. Keep in mind this fact: it is the outstanding, successful career women, the celebrated office managers and the professional women who are the best examples of the beauty-and-brains combination. If a woman has brains, she is bound to realize that appearance is of great important. A smart girl up creates poise and self-respect. It does not require a great deal of money. It does call for good taste, careful buying and an understanding of one's figure, face and type. Any woman whose brain clicks can make the grade, even though nature may have short-changed her in beauty coin.

Good-looking women who have made names for themselves in business, the arts and the professions do not spend long hours in beauty shops, nor do they have the attention of maids to arrange the hair-do and hand out the beauty props. They have their regular appointments for shampoo, wave set and manicure—now and then a facial—but they know a lot of the tricks themselves. In an emergency they can shampoo their hair and arrange it expertly. When in a hurry, they can touch up their fingernails. They have complexion tinting down to a fine point.

Their coiffures change with the modes, as do their clothes. They keep in step with the style parade, so they won't be sartorially dated.

The smart office worker will keep in mind a small good-looks kit, so she can fresh her complexion at least once during the day. She will have a comb, of course, so her hair-do will never appear whippy or scrambled. She will not use a strong perfume, but will content herself with a fragrant talcum friction or toilet rub after her bath.

Blouses ,gloves and neckwear will be scrupulously fresh and clean. Hat and coat will be carefully brushed every day. Shoes will not look as though that cleaner when she walks. Clattering heel. She will not use a strong jitter—especially the boss, who may have a delicate nervous system.

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

If you can't get what you want, try something else

Dear Miss Fairfax:
I am 15, and in love with a boy 21. I have been going with him for over a year.

Now it seems he has lost interest in me and wishes to go with other girls, and I am very jealous of him because he is the only one I have ever thought anything of.

Some of the girls who are going with him now say things to me that really hurt my feelings. Could you help me try to forget the things they say, and would you please help me to win him back and let him like only me?
B. H. G.

Dear B. H. G.:
If I could tell you how to win this boy back so firmly that you would be the only girl in his life, I would be the first one in the world to become such a keeper of a secret. No one knows what makes one boy like this girl or that one. Each boy, No matter how attractive a girl may be, she may still fail to attract the boy she wants to interest and vice versa.

Sooner or later ,if you are going to be a happy person, you'll have to learn that if you don't get what you want, you must be content with something else. The best part of this philosophy is, that if you are willing to accept it, you will probably dicover in the end that you like what you got, better than what you thought you wanted in the first place.

All of which philosophizing simply means that if this boy has lost interest in you, and wants to go with other girls, you'd better make up your mind to let him go and wait for another boy friend to come along.

As for what his present girl friends say, why bother? They'll stop trying to get a rise out of you quicker if you let them think you don't care what they say.

When you "can't forget", you do not want to

Dear Miss Fairfax:
Two years ago I met a service-man whom I like a lot, but didn't think I loved. For a year and a half, while his ship was in the States, I went with him. He loved me and wanted to get married, but since I didn't think I loved him, I told him I didn't want to see him any more.

Now, for the last six months, when I go out with anyone else, I find he is always on my mind and I can't forget him. I know now I love him, and if I had the chance again, I would marry him. I wrote to him but he didn't answer. What can I do?

Don't tell me to forget him as I can't.
J. M. D.

Dear J. M. D.:
If you've already made up your mind that you're going to go around mooning over this chap for the rest of your life, why write to me about it? Moreover, if you want to keep on brooding about a young man who doesn't answer your letters, and has probably already become interested in someone else, that's also your own affair, but pretty silly business I think.

On the other hand, if you really want to do the sensible thing, and the thing that is going to get you straight quickest, you'll keep right on going out with these other young men and having the kind of good times you're used to having, until you find that you think less and less about this man. That's always what happens if you're willing to give it a chance. It's only when people are neurotically willing to prefer unhappiness to happiness that they "can't forget".

BIRTHS SHOCK MOTHER

Mishawaka, Ind., March 18 — (AP) — The mother of the three-day-old twin girls born shortly after she collapsed in a restaurant said Thursday she mistook her labor pains for an upset stomach.

"I had pains like that before when I ate poisoned lettuce," said Mrs. Margie Anderson Johnson, 39. "It was a shock when I awoke and found I had had twins."

MILK POPULAR DRINK

Ottawa, March 18—(CP)—Maybe Canadians don't know it but they're drinking more and more milk. The bureau of statistics reported Thursday that milk production in Canada in 1949 totalled 16,789,000,000 pounds, or about 1,200 pounds for every man, woman and child in the land. Total 1948 production was 16,730,000,000 pounds.

THREE SENIOR POLICE OFFICERS WILL TESTIFY

"Windsor, March 18 — (CP) — The case of the missing papers hinges over Windsor's police inquiry, scheduled to close today after three days of investigation into allegations of corruption in the city's police force.

Two sheets of paper, purporting to list customers of bootlegger Joseph Assef, disappeared Friday on the second day of the inquiry. Crown Attorney Douglas Bell of Chatham, counsel in the inquiry conducted by Windsor's three-man police commission, discovered the loss at intermission time when he sought them for questioning of police witnesses.

Many Had Access

The hearing continued without any explanation. After adjournment Mr. Bell said that several persons, including other counsel and members of the commission, had access to the box. He did not think the papers disappeared overnight.

Assef's conviction on a bootlegging charge led to the inquiry. Mr. Bell indicated Friday night that only three witnesses remain to be called, head of the police criminal investigation, traffic and morality departments.

Hearing of the inquiry are the police commission's three members: Magistrate Hugh Landy, Alex Millan, chairman, Mayor Arthur J. Reaume and County Judge Albert J. Gordon.

Nine Windsor policemen were heard Friday and Thursday. Most showed that their addresses were included in the list of names after each appeared the "C.O.P." All the policemen denied in testimony that they had ever purchased or been given liquor or beer from Assef, now serving a six-month sentence on conviction of keeping liquor for sale.

Rist at "Lucky"

No meetings were made at Friday hearing of County Magistrate J. A. Hanrahan, whose recent judgment Mr. Assef asked hinted at "lucky" in Windsor law enforcement and touched off the probe.

Answering questions on Attorney Bell, who made an appearance Thursday at the inquiry's opening, Mr. Millan said that his judgment was based entirely on "facts of evidence" before him during Assef's trial." He added that Assef offered "no explanation of the extra-ordinary series."

Evidence was that Assef's liquor-selling activities totalled more than 8,400 individual sales of beer and liquor in a 30-day time period prior to last December 31 when the last sentence he was raided by Provincial Police. Large stocks of liquor and the alleged customer list were then seized.

Friday's session failed to bring forth any apparent contentious evidence.

One Interchange

One interchange between two witnesses dealt with a charge that Mayor Reaume had while he was a member of Sandwich in 1933 allegedly accepted "protection money" to allow a gambling house continue his "slot machines and pin-ball machines."

Mrs. James Shearton told the inquiry that her brother, Edward Tetley, had told her he had given the mayor. She was unable to give further details other than that the payments were supposed to be in the form of "hush money." Tetley who now lives in Detroit, testified immediately after her and said that he was not aware of ever paying protection money to anyone nor of ever giving money to Mayor Reaume.

Tetley said he did at that time pay rent for a building owned by Reaume while he occupied, and he also made payments for sewage. Resume to cover insurance. Mayor Reaume at the time was in the real estate business.

BELGIAN GOVT.

Despite threats to extend the strikes, reports from south Belgium's Walloon section indicate 63 the work stoppages—indicated the situation was back to normal.

"Don't forget today is pay day," said one striking informant, implying that further strike movements might develop Monday.

About 100,000 workers walked out Friday.

Most of the strikers were in the mining and metal-working industries of the French-speaking Walloon section, where 92 per cent of the voters in Sunday's advisory referendum opposed the King's return from exile.

The country-wide returns showed 57.6 per cent of those balloting favored Leopold's return to the throne he vacated after surrending to the Germans in 1940.

ANY ATTACK ON 11 CREW

"It was over in a minute or two," he said.

"I was below asleep but I heard someone yell 'Lower the sails' and that woke me.

"Then the crash came and someone cries 'My God, what happened?' By that time I was out on deck.

"Someone near the stacked dories was yelling for a knife to cut them loose but no one had one. I ran below and got one and had only a couple of swipes at the ropes before she went under.

Arms Twisted

"My arms were twisted in the rigging as she sank. God, but I still don't know how I'm here. I went down with her and then came up in the wreckage near a bunch of dories—somehow they had floated.

"It was taking water and I kept thinking 'I can't make it, I can't make it' and I kept on paddling anyway.

"Then they fired ropes and laddders from the Connector and I was safe."

"We saw her coming," he said, "and the skipper gave me the 'hard over' order. Parker was at the wheel himself just before the crash. She hit us almost straight on at the after end.

Jumped Into Rigging

"I jumped into the rigging and got caught in the wires. Then the spar came down and I came with it, into the water."

Mr. Parker said Parker wiped blood from a badly-gashed eye and Tanner cut a bleeding hand—crushed in the falling rigging.

"They did everything they could," said one. "But there wasn't much they could do. The De Costa sank like a stone."

"It was cold in the water," said Tanner, "damned cold."

"We lost everything . . . some of us haven't even got shoes to wear. We got a few clothes the other day and they went quickly. We're getting by here . . . look at the other poor devils," he glanced toward the companionway.

Outside, the two corpses were covered with blankets. One had died with one of his rubber boots on, the other was in his stocking feet.

Surviving besides Lohnes, Tanner and Parker were Neil Sullivan and William Crew of Canso and George Harlten of Queensport.

Besides the young skipper and Parker, the dead were Lohnes and Tanner, the dead are: Fred Brooks and Frank Sullivan, Canso; Miles Welsh, Grand Bank, Nfld., Harry Cooper, the engineer, Queensport; Leonard Mulgrew, Yarmouth and Romanus Amirault of Pubnico.

ALL 40 OF CREW

"We signalled with flares, a distress flag, international distress signal, mirrors, everything with mirrors. We fired 20-millimetre guns and machine guns. We circled and up and down on deck, waving anything they could lay their hands on.

What has happened to her was a mystery until the 26 men were picked up from the rafts in the mid-Atlantic.

After they climbed aboard the Corinthian, the survivors called for water and then told their story. Fire Broke Out

Fire broke out in the engine room of the net tender March 10. A series of explosions followed.

The crew fought the spreading flames and then abandoned the station aboard. All morning and all afternoon they struggled against the fire.

Then the Elder's commander ordered all the crew to abandon ship. They put out in a life boat and rafts.

The other 14 remained aboard to continue the fire-fighting. They were successful, using ammunition overboard as the 26 pulled away.

"They couldn't get into the engine room," one said. "It was too hot."

14 Conquer Blaze

Those 14 conquered the fire. They were still manning the flame and explosion scarred station when all came a week later.

Both the fire and explosion were unknown to the outside world until the rescue. She was last heard from March 7.

The only other report came from the military transport Gen. A. W. Brewster. The transport said she sighted the Elder Monday and the net tender was "in no apparent trouble."

To the men who had drifted and waited for help for a week in the boat and rafts. It was summed up this way in the words of chief boatswain mate Morgan A. Tidwell of Richmond, Calif.:

"We sighted two transport planes yesterday (Thursday) and then about noon today (Friday) we saw these four big patrol planes. We knew then that at last a rescue party was on the way."

They had been disappointed once before. They had seen the Gen. W. A. Brewster Monday, the same day the transport had sighted the Elder.

The Brewster tried to make planes from the Elder by wireless. They could," said one. "But there wasn't much they could do. The Brewster sighted the Elder and reported that one of a salvaged veterans who had been radioed re-enlistment in the services before the ship's disappearance. Identifications.

Rep. Earl Macdonnell (PC-Toronto Greenwood) carried the Chamber into a recorded vote when he moved that the house support the defence estimates. Chairman Dr. J. T. Thorson announced that the House had decided that question when it voted earlier this session against the Progressive Conservative motion for a defence committee.

Called for Ruling

George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, called for a ruling and the chairman was asked to refer the matter to Pr.

Mr. Claxton, in his statement, said arrangements already exist with Britain, the United States and France for the training of pilots in Canada. The other treaty powers are Belgium, Luxembourg, Denmark, Norway, Luxembourg and Denmark.

Canada would bear the cost of training the officers invited and it was hoped Canadian cadets present later to those countries under similar circumstances and on the same basis.

"He said he had discussed the matter with Commonwealth prime ministers last December and was struck with the fact that most of them recognized the necessity have a very considerable psychological force in bringing home to us all the unity of purpose and the necessity of working together that we must all have for the full strength of the Atlantic area is to be developed to the best advantage.

He reported that the department has completed the stage of planning civil defence at the federal level" a statement which the committee was told was a master plan has been worked out to cope with the effects of air attacks on Canadian cities.

Spending More

Again on the question of air power, he said this country is spending more than the combination of her defence dollar on that force than any other country's power. She will put an 11th reserve squadron into activity this year.

Canada also had worked out purchasing arrangements for the purchase of military equipment from the United States, but what was needed, he said, was a "packet for—is an "effective" revival of the joint Boards [ ] agreement for the integration of the North American defence industries.

The Canadian forces were seeking to "make ourselves more operational" and now have a total of 47,163 men. There should be an increase of 1,500 in the active within "a matter of months."

Turning to the recent Soviet-British exercise in the north, he said that further developments in new equipment and greater use of tracked vehicles such as bulldozers will emerge from that scheme. At the same time, the Arctic U.S. and Canadian concept of Artic warfare remains unchanged.

MacKenzie's Column: Cat Uses Room As Short Cut Across Cornice

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press News Analyst)

This adventure could have happened only in Cayenne, the leper colony of Devil's Island. Stuck" is right for Cayenne was about as close to Hell as one gets in this life.

A large percentage of the population of 10,000 was afflicted with leprosy. There was no segregation system. If you wanted to get rid of a dead cat you threw it into the street. Toilet facilities were odd fashioned privies.

There was a small hostel and had a corner room on the third floor with a window on each of the exposed sides. My French landlord said to me.

"I hope, sir, that you are closing the shutters of your windows at night."

When I told him I wasn't, because I was too hot, he insisted that it be done.

Afraid of Vampire Bats

There are more horrible forms of death lurking in the jungles and waters of a big book, but naturally my mind turned to things that fly. Vampire bats as my third-storey windows were invitations.

Among these denizens of the air are the fearsome vampire bats which stir me and beast to draining their blood.

"You wouldn't by any chances have vampire bats in mind, would they?" I demanded of the landlord—and he nodded reluctantly.

Well, that night I decided to leave my shutters open, and chance a vampire coming in on the moon's beam.

I was awakened out of a sound sleep by a clawing sensation at my head. I do not know silts. I sat bolt upright in bed and stared at the window. There on the rail, my pet cat was sitting.

It was a yellow-and white tom-cat.

Tom had merely used my room as a short cut to somewhere else on the exposed walls of building around the cornice.

Expensive Hobby Annoys Judge

Toronto, March 18 (CP) — Mr. Justice D. P. J. Kelly yesterday took steps to curtail Harry P. Teeter's "expensive hobby" of suing people.

Mr. Justice Kelly has started 18 Supreme Court actions, and has taken similar actions on several in the division courts since 1946 and won only $23 from one case — and had to pay the costs in it.

His Lordship said "No legal proceedings should be instituted (by Teeter) without leave of the Supreme Court from this day forward or until further order."

Teeter's list of defendants ranges from broadcasting companies to court stenographers and include a bailiff and three lawyers.

By SAM GORDON

The Kibitzer

Vienna is famous for something besides schnitzel and light operatic music. A century ago some whist player there published a clever play. It became known as the Vienna coup. Hot stuff.

The Vienna coup is a squeeze with a twist. The twist is that you first use up a cinch card of your own to force out the card for an opponent. Then you proceed to squeeze him out of it.

There was the deal you see here:

♥Q 9 8 5
♦Q J 6
♣A K 7
WEST	EAST
♠J 8 5 3	♠A K 10
♥9 7 4 2	♥J 6 3
♦10 9 5	♦K 8 7 4 2
♣6 2	♣10 8 3
SOUTH
♠K Q 7 4
♥A K 10
♦A 10 3
♣Q 9 5 4

South was playing the contract at a 4 spade. East won this with the ace of spades. His return right there was important.

If he had come back with the spade ten, the contract would no doubt have gone down to defeat. However, east thought he saw a more devastating return with a diamond smeaback.

South hopped up on this with the diamond ace and west had a good king for the future. Or so it looked. The cinch ace of diamonds being out of the way, the west king seems a good card now.

Four sound clubs were run and west had to find a couple of cards he could afford to throw away. He could get rid of one of his spades. Should he give up another one of his spades?

If he does, dummy runs three spades and throws both dummy diamonds. On the third spade, west was always in a new, Vienna style.

Parliament At a Glance

(By The Canadian Press)

Defence Minister Claxton said Canada has invited members of the Australia-New Zealand Treaty to send a total of 250 men to be trained here.

Maj.-Gen. G. R. Pearkes, V.C. (PC — Nanaimo) said Canada made a mistake in adopting the American F-86 jet fighter as a bomber interceptor.

The Commons voted 84 to 27 in support of a ruling that a Progressive Conservative speaker could not revive a demand for a defence committee.

Senator W. H. Dennis (PC — Nova Scotia) said partial loss of world markets is causing an "unfortunate situation" in the Maritimes and Newfoundland.

Monday

The Commons will consider government business. Tuesday it will sit.

AT THE CAPITOL — Dan Dailey, seated at centre of scene, is mocking Hitler, which may or may not be a good idea at this moment, inasmuch as Dailey is a member of the French Underground at this point, trying, with the aid of pretty Underground Leader Corrine Calvet, to escape to London with vital Nazi secrets. All taker place in John Ford's screamingly riotous army farce, "When Willie Comes Marching Home" showing at the Capitol Theatre for its first Belleville showing and now in its third week, Shea's Toronto.

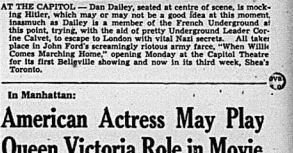
American Actress May Play Queen Victoria Role in Movie

By FAT USSHER
(Canadian Staff Writer)

New York, March 18—(CP)—It's all right with British actor Sir Cedric Hardwicke if an American actress plays the role of Queen Victoria in a forthcoming movie.

Sir Cedric this week chided criticisms in Britain at the casting of Hollywood actress Irene Dunne for the role in the film, "The Mudlark," to be produced here, the other side of the Atlantic this summer.



Acting ability, not nationality, should be the criterion in casting, he said at a luncheon of the Establish-American club of New York. Sir Cedric currently is playing Julius Caesar in a New York revival of Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra."

Canada Bound

The Sadler's Wells Ballet on its second North American tour within two years will be seen again in Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto late in 1950. But Impresario Solman says the company's tight schedule means it can play less than a week in each of the Canadian cities. The engagement on this side opens in New York next Oct. 10.

Tractor Crew Battles Winter Near Moosonee

First drills there broke through the paleozoic formation at about 1,100 feet, but success on a second hole was started at Jabb Lake, 70 miles northwest of Campbell Lake. Two holes are now completed, because of freeze-up.

Start in June

Mr. Gemmell said the Jabb Lake hole will be completed this year. Work is expected to start about the first week of June or when weather conditions permit a drill crew to be flown in from Timmins.

When it is finished, the crew will move to the James Bay coast site to work on the new hole.

The new project is considered essential to provide a minimum of information needed to interpret the regional structure of the area, Mr. Gemmell said.

House Made Safe Against Blasting, Owner Unhappy

Philadelphia, March 18 (AP) — The house is safe now:

Mrs. Marie Dougherty complained when blasting operations at a nearby construction project opened cracks in the walls of her home. She feared for her safety.

The workmen promised to make the house safe.

Last night Mrs. Dougherty came home. She opened the front door, found two huge boards propped cross-wise across the entrance.

Inside was a mass of timber. Huge boards lined all the walls, criss-crossed from room to room. Holes had been cut in the ceiling or each bedroom.

Mrs. Dougherty was — well, unhappy. The house might be safe, but walking from room to room was like playing "London Bridge."

Then the doorbell rang. It was an adjuster from the contractor's insurance company.

"Everything's going to be all right," he told Mrs. Dougherty. "We'll find you a new apartment to live in."

"But what about right now?" Mrs. Dougherty asked.

The adjuster looked at the crossed timbers.

"Why that isn't so bad," he said. "What if you'd had a fire'?"

FRANKFORD

32 Players On the Ice At One Time

Frankford — With the Frankford District Hockey League entry, and the Trent Valley League team out of the playoffs for the season, it is certainly encouraging to the community to have one team still in the running. Wednesday night in the local arena, Percy's Famous Firehalls edged the Wellington Wildcats in the spectacle of the season, by a 5-4 count. Clinton "The Rocket" Hanna bulged the twine late in the third period with the winning counter, on a nice pass from "Fearless" Farley. The visitors took a 4-3 lead in the initial period, but then "Flash" Rogers and "Cannonball" Cooke, the Foxboro Comet, took over. Sparked by Ed "Punch" Farley and Bill "Cyclone" Griffin, the Wellington crew matched the Firehalls play for play. "Chip" Boyce and "Zeke" Ellis also turned in outstanding performances for the Wildcats.

Halfway through the second period, the play was temporarily halted while the players were treated to hot dogs, courtesy of Captain Percy.

Tempers began to flare a bit in the third period, and a few fights resulted. (The way they were swinging, fists couldn't have beat their way out of a paper bag.) A couple of penalties soon settled the disturbance, and the game once again settled down to peaceful, gentlemanly play as it should be say gorillas.

This classic, through the cooperation of the Canadian Canneries of Wellington, Picton, and Frankford, and the Lions Club of Frankford, brought a sizeable contribution toward the March of Dimes. Plans are being made for another game between these two bitter rivals.

Siamese Twins Die

Port of Spain, Trinidad, Mar. 18 (CP)—Trinidad's first Siamese twins, Rita and Greta Lovell, died Thursday night just four days after the death of their 24-year-old mother.

The twins, joined face-to-face from the chest to the lower abdomen, were ten days old.

Their father, Alexander, Reginald Lovell, said their death was unexpected by Spanish Roman Catholics.

Doctors had said there was little hope of an operation to separate the babies.

BULLDOZER OPERATOR DROWNED

Renfrew, March 18—(CP)—Albert Aelek, 24, of Renfrew, was drowned Thursday when the Upton bulldozer he was operating broke through the frozen surface of a muskeg and dropped into 30 feet of water. The accident occurred while Aelek was clearing brush for a hydro power line about 10 miles north of here. The body has not been recovered.

Manitoba Will Not Increase Basic Grants

(By the Canadian Press)

The education issue was to the fore in the Manitoba legislature yesterday, when Education Minister Ralph Maybank announced that the Manitoba government will not increase its basic school grant to municipalities.

The Manitoba provincial grant totals 25 per cent of education costs to municipalities. It meets 31 per cent of rural costs and between six and seven per cent of school costs in Winnipeg.

The Nova Scotia legislature will open Tuesday says Premier Macdonald said the legislative program will probably be heavier than usual. He declined to give details, apart from saying that the program includes a substantial highway program and the province's one-third share of a proposed bridge over the Canso Straits.

The Prince Edward Island legislature saw introduction of a bill providing for loans for building of potato warehouses.

The New Brunswick legislature dismissed possible establishment of a sugar beet industry and a subcommittee was appointed to study the matter.

The Quebec legislature was told by Premier Duplessis that it was right for a growing province to have representation in order to represent Quebec before the courts. He was speaking on the bill creating the new post of solicitor-general adopted by the house.

However, Premier Duplessis said also that changes in name of some provincial departments would be in accord with the province's size and growth.

"Quebec is a sovereign state by virtue of its constitution and without jurisdiction," said Premier Duplessis.

Heated Debate

At Edmonton the Alberta legislature heard heated debate between Premier Manning and Argue Hutton Wray (Ind.—SC—Banff Cochrane) over estimates for the provincial treasurer's department.

Mr. Wray denied Premier Manning's accusation he was making "wild and irresponsible" statements. He said combines exist in distribution of milk and that a plebiscite should be held in Edmonton and Calgary on mixed drinking. He charged there was a conspiracy and "disappearance of funds" in treasury branches.

Premier Manning replied that the record of the branches compared favorably with any other financial institutions. He said the House had listened for a number of days to "these irresponsible statements."

The Saskatchewan legislature heard Jacob Benson (CCF—Last Mountain) declare that he now is sitting as an independent. In budget debate Mr. Benson said that the C.C.F. now has become "no better or worse than the Liberals." He implied that he may vote against the budget but would not cross the floor to the opposition of the House.

MORE LIFE INSURANCE

Ottawa, March 18 — (CP) — Canadians took out $1,636,375,344 worth of Life Insurance last year, an increase of 8.8 per cent over 1948. Ordinary insurance accounted for $1,282,403,749 of the total and Group Life Insurance underwritten in Canada in 1949, the department of insurance said in a preliminary report Thursday.

Toronto, March 18 (CP) — Dr. Leopold Infeld said Friday night that doubt as to his loyalty to Canada has been created by George Drew's "not-too-subtle innuendos."

"I am and intend to remain a loyal citizen of Canada," the Polish-born, 51-year-old mathematics professor said in an interview.

Dr. Infeld, who fled from his native land to escape pre-war persecution of the Jews and was a co-worker of Dr. Albert Einstein before coming to the University of Toronto, referred to statements made in, the Commons Thursday by the Progressive Conservative leader.

(Mr. Drew said he believes "appropriate steps should be taken to ascertain the circumstances under which Dr. Infeld plans to return" to Russian-dominated Poland "armed with certain atomic knowledge."

Mr. Drew said he has evidence that Dr. Infeld made a "strangely accurate prediction" in 1946 that Russia would have the atomic bomb within three years.)

"Mr. Drew's source," said Dr. Infeld, is The Ensign, a Roman Catholic weekly newspaper which printed this information under the headline, "Poland Recalls Toronto Atomist'

"The Ensign and Mr. Drew claim that I am an atomic scientist. This statement is utterly false. It is equally false to suggest that I am being 'recalled.' Mr. Drew were more interested in the truth or falsehood of his statement, he would have found out easily that I never did any research on atomic-secret—work is atomic energy."

Comments on Statement

At Ottawa, Mr. Drew commented in a statement:

"It is difficult to tell exactly what Dr. Infeld claims to be false in The Ensign article which I brought to the attention of the House of Commons yesterday.

"He confirms the fact that he was in Poland last Summer and that he has indicated his desire to be in no way a lover of absence from Toronto University, so that among other things, he can return to Poland again to give graduate lectures at the University of Warsaw and work with those who are interested in the same field of research.

"Those who teach in countries with Communist governments are ordinarily acceptable to the Communist authorities on more than academic grounds. It is certain that anyone who is opposed to Communism would not be permitted to teach in a Polish university today. Dr. Infeld's statement alone is sufficient reason to inquire why he is so acceptable to the Communist education authorities in Poland." .

Police Will Not Comment on Holdup Report

Windsor, Ont., March 18 (CP) —An unconfirmed report late Friday said police were that a second holdup followed one earlier in the night in which a Windsor lunch-counter proprietor was shot and robbed of a large amount of money and cheques by two masked gunmen who held up his cafe.

Hospital officials report Joseph Chalopka is in good condition and under treatment for shotgun wounds in his right arm and shoulder.

Police would not comment on either holdup report.

The second report was that two gunmen held up a pedestrian on a west-side street and robbed him of some $9,000 in cash.

Bar Association President Refrains From Predicting What Field of Law Will be in 2000

By JOHN MOSHER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Saint John, N. B., March 18 — (CP) — A half-century hence the law of Canada will be "governed by substantially different from what it is today, says A. W. Carter, K. C., but the President of the Canadian Bar Association refrains from predicting what the field of law will be like in the year 2,000.

He says:

"He would be a bolder man than I who would venture to predict what fundamental changes will take place in Canadian law in the next 50 years. Nor do I think that anyone is fitted to make such a prediction.

In a democracy such as Canada's, says Mr. Carter, public opinion determines the law.

"What the law will be in the next 50 years will depend on what the majority of Canadians decide they want or is in their best interest."

Canadians realized that during the last 25 years there had been a "growing encroachment by governments, both Dominion and Provincial, and irrespective 'of parties, on the activities which in the past have been dominated by individuals."

When Mr. Carter began the study of law in 1913, he approached each problem "from the viewpoint of the individual -citizen and his rights." Little emphasis was laid on the duties of the citizen to the state. "Now the reverse is true and the duties rather than the rights of citizens are No Indication

Mr. Carter went on:

"As yet there has been no indication that in the future, or even at least, the individual will regain his former freedom of action or that governments will give up the fields of human activity they have made their own. In Great Britain, indeed, the government is extending still further the scope of its activities and the embracing character of its controls. In New Zealand and Australia, on the other hand, the results of the recent electoray reveal a change in public opinion towards reducing government activity. . . .

"If the great socialistic experiment being carried on in Great Britain is a success in that it continues to command the approval of the people, the chances are that country and provides them with improved standards of living, we in Canada may find ourselves following their lead, and as a people with a system of law in which the government will be a greater and greater factor.

"If, on the other hand, the socialistic experiment in Great Britain proves a failure, we may well find public opinion in Canada favoring a return to the former system under which the individual was given wide scope for initiative and enterprise, and this country, like the United States, expanded and prospered."

An important meeting is coming up at the council chambers in the City Hall on Wednesday evening that will decide the fate of a new curling rink in this city. This is a meeting at which everyone who is interested in curling is invited to attend and speak their piece. There will be no attempt to badger the assembly into purchasing stock or obligating themselves to any policy. It will be strictly a rehash of the conference held in the early days when curling rink in this city. There are many in the city, who were ardent curlers, but the majority had reached an age, enthusiastic curlers, but the majority had reached an age, where they do not feel able to organize and help in the construction of a rink but are willing to lend a helping hand. The building of the rink will be strictly up to the younger and middle-aged residents of this city, who would like to see and have a place where they can engage in one like to see and have a place where they can engage in one of the finest sports, that is played. Curling is not an old man's game. It is a game for youth and this can be seen from the number of school rinks in operation.

It should be a matter of civic pride to have a curling rink in this city. There is not a city in the Province of Ontario, the size of Belleville that does not have an enthusiastic curling club. Curling is a healthful exercise, requires ability and the fellowship at a meeting cannot be overmeasured. Friends that are made on the curling ice last forever. In many of the smaller communities in residential districts a curling rink is installed off their courts, and to work and in no time a rink was constructed. Surely there are those in Belleville that could get up a group of this kind to establish a worthwhile sport in this city. The cost will not be excessive. The City Council through a recommendation of the Parks Board had provided the land at a nominal rental of a dollar a year, the location is in the Agricultural and Exhibition grounds. The directors have not proceeded as far as they can go without help. Plans will be produced at this meeting and the total cost will be announced.

Also the directors have secured a charter for a limited liability company and the stock certificates are issued and which will be read at the meeting. Members of the directorate are sure that the curling proposition is in the right spot and prospects for the day that the doors are opened. The rest is up to the citizens. It is for both old and young. The meeting will be largely attended if a committee is appointed and a strong favorite to meet the Peterborough Legion in Senior "B" playdowns . . . That should be a matter of interest. The group that is there, though, and we must pulldawg with Legion to cop the nod . . . We hope the "Queen's Three Bucks" rink is the pickings . . . Allan Kelleher is back from a brief sojourn in the scented Florida breeze around Fort Lauderdale where he worked out with the Pittsburgh Pirates and made the mechanical pitcher down theaiway, a gadget that flips the ball so fast it is back in the pitcher's mitt before an ordinary batter can get the hickory off his shoulder . . . Mid-Hastings is seething over a controversy, the central figures of which are the Tweed and Madoc Hastings Addington League entries . . . Seems as how the Tweed team scored the winning goal in the last game of the finals and were in the dressing room when it was announced the linesman decided the tally was offside . . . The bowls to high heaven emitted and Tweed demanded another game . . . Madoc has refused to play claiming the referee awarded them the game . . . Meanwhile the Sam Curry Trophy, emblematic of the league title is an orphan . . . "no favor, no mawver, with not a blosmin' place to go" . . . Why not let the referee toss for it, Sam sez? — the mug at least would have a home for the summer . . .

Fly Rod Tune-up for 1950

By JOHN ALDEN KNIGHT

(Noted sportsman author and creator of Solunar Tables).

Not long ago I received a letter from an outdoor editor who has charge of the outdoors department of one of the newspapers that publishes the Solunar Tables each week. In that letter he told me two things that gave me food for thought.

First, he mentioned the fact that the fly-rod is rapidly gaining popularity quite noticeably as the years pass. I, too, have observed the increase in the number of fly-rod fans. It shows up quite clearly on our bass waters.

When watching the fly casters, the sad but inescapable truth is brought home that all too few of them have learned how to use a fly-rod well. I don't see one good caster in a hundred.

Same Mistakes Made

Moreover, the bad casters all make the same mistakes. Quite usually, each and every one of them has failed to ground himself on correctly. Apparently in the simple fundamentals of fly casting.

Of course, there is a good deal of misinformation still being circulated about the art of fly casting. Some instructions, still being printed and circulated, actually advocate having the beginner hold a book or a blackboard chief under the casting army during the initial stages of instruction.

That one bit of sophistry alone has been responsible for the production of a great many bad fly casters.

In this picture, which purported to show the beginner the proper way to hold a fly-rod, the thumb was on top of the rod grip while the fingers pressed the grip firmly against the palm.

Purposely I have emphasized these two fallacies. It may be that there are fly casters who can turn out a casting job with a book under the casting arm and the rod held with the described grip. Frankly, I've never seen a man who can do it. I know I can't.

Easier to do Correctly

Strangely enough, it is much easier to cast a fly correctly than it is to do so incorrectly. Let us take a quick look at the fundamentals of easy fly casting.

First, take a look at the two sketches that accompany this article. Now, using a pencil or a fountain pen — anything handy that will serve as an impromptu rod grip — hold your "rod grip" as the pictures tell you.

Next, instead of holding your casting arm stiffly against your side, with hand and forearm directly in front of you, allow your arm to hang freely, so that it is comfortable, and place your casting hand somewhat to the side.

Now go through the casting motions with your arm relaxed. It is free to move as it will.

Having done this, try the other grip. Note how the hand position and with the thumb on top of the rod grip, locks the wrist almost to the point of immobilization. So much for that.

In fly casting, too much importance cannot be placed upon making the back cast correctly. When you pick up the line from the water in front of you, toss that back cast high.

Toss Line High

Your back cast, when thrown properly, should extend upward at an angle of at least twenty or twenty-five degrees. Don't require the habit of throwing the back cast straight back, parallel to the water. That is fatal, the higher the better.

The reason for this is obvious. From the moment your line passes your rod tip its journey to the rear, it begins to fall. Thus, if your back cast is thrown high, the line when fully extended is about even with the rod tip.

When the forward cast is started, the rod tip pulls directly against the line and gives you control over it so that accuracy of location can be built up without effort.

If the back cast is too low, then the line must be lifted up and over. The rod tip has less control over its direction and there is considerable loss of power.

If your back cast is thrown correctly it is difficult for you to make a bad forward cast. If the back cast is badly thrown, it is almost impossible to make a good forward cast.

Last but not least, make sure your forward cast is made in a true arc. Other way of saying "make sure that you start the forward cast at exactly the right instant."

Practice on Lawn

To learn sound timing, take time out for some casting practice in the yard. Any reasonably level lawn will do. As you practise, turn your head with each cast and observe how your back cast is high, up there where it should be.

By watching the back cast each time you will absorb timing automatically. Your line can fall with your eyes shut, simply by the feel of the thing, whether or not your back cast is right and, just as important, how long it is time for the line to extend itself to the rear.

Once you master these fundamentals, your days on stream or lake will be pleasant ones. Neglect them and you won't get near as much fun out of your fishing.

Hull Volants Meet Cornwall In Loop Finals

Ottawa, March 18 — (CP) Hull Volants, Quebec "cinch team" of the Eastern Canada Senior Hockey League playoffs, Friday night advanced into the league finals by downing Ottawa's R.C.A.F. Flyers 4-2 in the deciding game of a best-of-five semi-final round before 2,500 fans.

The victory was the fifth for Volants since they left the playoff trail and equalled the total number of wins the club was able to score in the entire regular season schedule. They ended the schedule at the bottom of the seven-team loop with a record of five wins, 19 losses and one game tied.

Cornwall Colts, who meet Ottawa Army in the quarter-finals and then must play three victories against Flyers. They won the Cornwall semi-final series in a best-of-seven final series opening at Cornwall Monday night with the second game scheduled here Wednesday.

Veteran forward Smiley Mernoske spored the winning goal on a 30-foot backhand drive late in the third period was three minutes old. Flyers, who twice had taken a one-goal lead in the opening period only to see Hull rally to deadlock the count, pressed for the remainder of the period but were unable to beat Hull goalie Gaston Desforges.

Roger Leger and Gilles Generchuk notched the other Hull tallies, while Patsy Guzzo and Billy Watson scored for the Airmen.

Weekend Games Will Settle Many Questions

The games between New York Rangers and Montreal Canadiens will hold the National Hockey League spotlight this weekend. Canadiens are striving to take over second place from the Toronto Maple Leafs while New York needs a victory to clinch a place in the Stanley Cup playoffs.

Toronto Maple Leafs, holding second place by a scant two points, might entertain the last-place Chicago Black Hawks, and the league-leading Detroit Red Wings play host to Boston Bruins. On Sunday Toronto will play at Detroit, and Boston at Chicago.

If Boston loses a game, they're definitely out of the play-offs. The Bruins still have a slim mathematical chance, but they're nine points behind New York in order.

But right now the question is whether Canadiens can oust the Leafs from third position. Canadiens have two games left against Toronto, one each against Toronto, Boston and Chicago. The Leafs have five left, against all the others — Chicago, Detroit, Montreal, Boston and New York in order.

Tonight's game at Toronto will be embellished by a presentation from citizens of Timmons to two of their native sons, Bill Barilko of Leafs and Bill Mosienko of Chicago. More than 200 Timmins fans are making the journey for the presentation.

Sports Writer's Lot Not Happy One at Tourney

By MICHAEL O'MARA
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 18 (CP) — A sports writer's lot is not a happy one at figure-skating tournament. He has to be a cross between a calculating machine and Emily Post.

The scoring of figure-skating is a highly-complex affair—and to keep abreast of events the reporter has to have his own scorecard. Judges' official point-totals aren't issued until long after the last flights is skated, and by them a lot of deadlines may have gone by.

The poor tired sports writer is faced with a long series of sums, running into two or three decimal places, involving addition, division and multiplication —all to be worked out hastily while trying to keep one eye on the next skater's ies, s and spins.

It would be easy for Einstein or Dr. Jacob Bronowski but that normally count on their fingers its extremely trying.

The other big problem at a skating tournament is the social one. Skaters are high-strung, sensitive characters. So are their coaches. So are their fathers. So are their mothers. So are the innumerable hulking-wearing girls that hang around the rink.

Oddly enough, many of these sensitive, hi-strung characters seem to dislike many other similar sensitive, high-strung characters.

The sports writer's difficulty is to remember who likes whom and likes whom. A word of polite praise to one competitor within earshot of another competitor can win him such a dirty look that he wishes he'd drop dead.

London, March 18 — (CP) Seven local business men have bought Crystal Palace Football Club. Their leader is David Harris, hardware merchant.

The club, in poor financial straits for some seasons and currently wallowing near the foot of the Third Division South table, was on the market for several weeks.

The group bought out the chief stockholder, Percy Harper, who held a controlling block of 7,000 shares. Reported price was £21,000 ($64,000).

"We aim to build Crystal Palace into a first-class club," Harris told reporters. "We hope to see it in the First Division within five years and eventually (in the Cup finals) at Wembley."

At Manchester, last November, he was leading at the final jump when he fell and the race went to second-place Paljoy. At Stratford-on-Avon next time out, he fell again at the last hurdle when disputing the lead with Tynwald who went on to win.

The jinx was partially whipped at Lingfield Park. Approaching the final jump at the last, horse sense shied repeatedly but jockey Charles Spares finally forced him over. Dorodon, coming up fast from behind, took advantage of the leader's hesitation to finish in a dead heat.

Nobody knows just why the animal, which "leaps like a deer" at all the other hurdles, refuses the last one. Trainer Willie Stephenson says:

"The most likely explanation is that he knows he is likely to receive more pressure after jumping the final hurdle."

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, March 18 — (CP)— Those shillelaghs hockey players wield are taking a mighty big bite out of the clubs' budgets.

Rex (Guelph Mercury) Mac-Leod says he learned from Guelph Biltmores of the Ontario Hockey Association Junior "A" League that they would spend about $4,000 to $5,000 for hockey sticks this season.

This sum supplies the entire Guelph Minor Hockey Association which embraces approximately 50 teams, Rex adds.

But the cost can be pretty steep for one team.

Leafs of the National Hockey League say they spent $2,467.50— at $2.75 each — for their 1948-49 supply.

Rex says there have been few games this season in which players or both teams didn't break at least a dozen sticks.

He recalls that "many years ago an amateur player, who later became a National Leaguer, allegedly accepted a considerable sum of money to report to a club in the United States and then wilfully violated the agreement."

The player wouldn't return the money and the club could take no action because, in those days of simon-pure amateurism it could not broadcast the fact it was paying players in an amateur league.

Rex says, "and it wasn't so long ago that you could run an entire team for a season on $5,000 and still have enough left over to toss a banquet."

Wants Refund

Hockey stick prices aren't the only money worries facing Guelph Biltmores these days. Michael (Kingston Whig-Standard) Rodden says the club is seeking to be reimbursed $400 it claims to have paid Eddie Slankamer, and Earl Reibel who later skipped to Windsor Spitfires, now opposing Guelph in the O. H. A. Junior A finals.

"It is alleged that each of the players mentioned was given $200 in an agreement whereby they were to line up with the Biltis," Rodden says, "but they failed to report and refused to return the coin of the realm."

Mike says the case has attracted a great deal of interest, and its outcome may have far-reaching effects on future transactions.

Kincardine Juvenile Team Wins First Game of Title Series from Stirling 6 to 3

Unbeaten in 24 games, the Kincardine juvenils, "C" team, added to their laurels here in Memorial Arena last night, when they formed back the Stirling kids' threat in the first game of the best two-of-three O.M.H.A. finals. The score was 6-3.

The teams battled all through the game, and with the smart-clad army kids from the shores of Lake Huron, gave every indication they were of championship stock.

They deserved it. And by that we mean that the kids from Huron displayed a brand of juvenile hockey that has seldom been seen here.

On the other hand, the Stirling kids fought back tooth and nail, in the third period staged a scoring rally that threatened at times to get within striking distance.

They could fast hockey with a minimum of checking. Both teams appeared to be content with wide-open tactics with a minimum of body-checking.

The second game will be played in Kincardine on Tuesday night.

Mclnnes with three goals led the winner's attack. Robson scored twice with the help from his teammates.

Reggan in goal for Kincardine was as cool as a cucumber under fire. He was good there is no doubt about it.

The teams:

Stirling: Goal, Bates; defence, Faulkner, Donnan; centre, Robson; wings, Hanna, Wannamaker; subs, Phillips, Burgess, MacCauley, Reid, Moran, Hanna.

Cumming Starts Fifty First Year With One Club

Toronto, March 18 — (CP) — George Cumming, professional at the Toronto Golf Club, this Sunday will add another year to his record for continuous service to one golf club.

The veteran golfer, born in Bridge of Weir, Scotland, on May 20, 1879, will start his fifty-first year of service to Canadian golf and the Toronto club this Sunday.

At the age of 10, the dean of Canadian golf was a caddy at the Ranfurly Club and at 14 joined the staff of a Glasgow clubmaking firm to learn the rudiments and intricacies of the exacting trade. For many years he made all the clubs sold in the Toronto pro shop and has been retained as perhaps the foremost authority on clubs among Canadian pros.

When only 20, Cumming was informed the job of pro at his present club was his for the taking and he took little time in making his decision.

In 1905, the second year the Canadian Open championship was held, he won the title with a score of 184. He was runner-up in 1907, 1909 and 1914. Better than winning championships himself though — he has also won the Canadian Professional Golfers Championship — he likes to look back and see all his former assistants and pupils who have won golfing fame.

United States Latest Threat To Mercurys

By MICHAEL O'MARA
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 18 (CP) — Edmonton Mercurys tonight meet the United States in the latest threat in their march to the world amateur hockey championships.

The favored Canadian entry yesterday whomped Switzerland 11-1, but the United States team established itself a serious challenger somewhere by turning in a sharp upset over the highly-rated Swedish sextet.

The Americans, after playing sluggish, defensive hockey in the preliminary round, opened up with a sharp passing attack and close body-checking in beating the Swedes 4-2.

In the third game of the final round-robin competition British edged Switzerland 5-3. The game was fought right down to the wire, with Britain scoring the winning marker two seconds before the final whistle, but neither team had figured to threaten for the title.

The United States victory, after their mediocre showing in the opening round which included an 8-3 defeat by Sweden, surprised the experts who had figured the Americans practically out of the running for the crown.

The key game of the tournament now appears to be tonight's U. S.-Canada clash, although the Swedes had been favored to take European honors and still cannot be considered eliminated from the world race.

In view of the sudden improvement in the Americans' play, the Mercurys will have to be on their toes for tonight's battle.

The Canadians put on a seemingly half-hearted performance yesterday. The lop-sided score only underlined Switzerland's incompetence; poor ice conditions hampered the Canadians to some extent, but they were not as sharp as usual. Although the Mercs poured in 11 goals, it was the Canadian endurance more than superior skill which defeated the Swiss.

French Fighter Easily Defeated By Title Holder

New York, March 18 — (AP) — As long as he doesn't have to fight Sandy Saddler again, Willie Pep still looks like reign over the featherweights for a long time to come.

The little 27-year-old 126-pound champion underscored that last night when he walked to an easy, 15-round title bout victory over Ray Famechon of France, the European featherweight king, in Madison Square Garden.

It was a neat, if not gaudy, conquest for the fleet-footed boxing master from Hartford, Conn., even though many of the 12,108 cash customers let loose with a torrent of boos at the final bell. For Willie the Wisp's clutching tactics as well as for the impotency of the foreign challenger's punches.

Don't get the idea, though, that Pep has forgotten Saddler.

"We accepted an offer of a $100,000 guarantee plus the privilege of 40 per cent of the gate to fight Saddler again last June," said Lou Viscal, Pep's manager. "Saddler was offered $25,000 but Charley Johnston (Saddler's manager) wanted $50,000. The match didn't come off. Well, that's not our fault. We're ready anytime that 100 grand gets posted." Pep's attitude is that I'm ready for him. But Lou does the bestness."

Won Title Back

Saddler is the stiff-hitting New York youngster who knocked out Pep in four rounds in Oct. 1946 to win the title. Willie regained it by outpointing the skinny Negro in a return bout—under at the Garden Feb. 11, 1949.

As for last night, a glance at the officials' scorecards will give you an idea of the rout.

Referee Ruby Goldstein voted it 10-3 with two even. Judge Charley Shortell had it 11-3 and Judge Jack O'Sullivan made it 9-3-3. The Associated Press had Pep the winner, 11-3 with one even. Pep was a 5-to-18 favorite.

Sports Show One of the Best To be Offered

Toronto, March 18 — (CP)—A happy combination of attractions from the outdoors and the city is drawing thousands of persons to the third annual Canadian Sportsmen's Show at the Coliseum here.

The show, sponsored by the conservation - conscious Toronto Anglers' and Hunters' Association, was officially opened last night by Ontario's Premier Frost. The premier said he considered it a privilege to have a part in helping to make citizens aware of the potentialities of the province's natural resources.

Officials of the show are hopeful that at least 200,000 persons from Canada and the United States will attend the show which closes March 25

The attractions range from an Indian village though displays of wild animals to Miss Canada IV, the sleek speedboat in which Harold Wilson of Ingersoll, Ont., plans another attempt at the world speed record this year.

Only a stone's throw away from the latest model television sets and automobiles stands the Indian village, with birch bark canoes, teepees and tribal ceremonial trappings. Displaying handicrafts are a group of braves led by Chief Howard Scott of the Six Nations Reserve near Brantford, wearing beads and buckskin.

Many Exhibits

Exhibits include displays of the dressed pelts of Ontario wild animals, clothing worn by Canadian soldiers in the Yukon during the recent Exercise Sweetbriar, luminous fishing floats and aluminum canoes. New to some Canadian sportsmen are the samples of English fishing tackle, with such items as Devon minnows and weighted spinning flies.

Sharkey, the trained seal, is back for his third year in the stage and tank exhibition. As a show stealer, he gets heavy competition, however, from dancing horses, performing dogs, log rollers, a flyfly-caster, table tennis players, swimmer Clir Lumsden who won last year's Canadian Exhibition marathon, acrobats and trick divers.

Proceeds will be used by the Toronto Anglers' and Hunters' Association to carry on an extensive conservation program.

ONTARIO BUILDING

Ontario products constituted 90 percent of the materials used to build the East Block of the Ontario parliament buildings.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, March 18 — (AP)— Roy Worters, who helped make history as goalie for the old New York Americans, dropped in with his old enemy, manager Frank Boucher of the Rangers, to see a game the other night . . . The proceedings were notably dismal and just before the end Roy suggested: "Let's slip out now, Frank, and beat the crowd." . . . (Nobody worries about that when the Americans played; there was no crowd.) . . . As they started up the aisle, they heard a fan remark: "If the bosses can't take it, why should we?"

Two to Go

Boucher, a rather serious gent, has an explanation for such a situation, although he beefs privately about players who "won't fight for the $200 extra they'd get by finishing third." . . . After surveying the 1940-50 season, Frank concludes: "Hockey on the whole is not up to pre-war standards. It will take another year or two before the kids develop that far . . . The Rangers and Boston meet in their final twilly than most clubs for young players this year, but as a result they've suffered a let-down and haven't played as well as Detroit, Toronto and Montreal . . . But the funny thing is that Chicago is dead worst of all and they have many old stars — fellows like Paul Bentley, Bill Mosienko and Frank Brimsek." . . . Boucher didn't say it, but maybe he figures Tommy Tobin should adopt Branch Rickey's motto: "I'd rather trade a player a year too soon than a year too late."

Lester Patrick's 50 Years On Ice

"Grey Fox" Lester Patrick outlines his opinion on what makes a great hockey player, a great combination of players, a great team. At both amateur and most successful master, Patrick here tells the secret of training physique, character, reflexes and harmony that make a championship hockey club. In Patrick's book the greatest player in history was "Cyclone" Taylor: the luckiest and greatest right-wing man of all time, Bill Cook of the Rangers.

By BOB THOMAS

The Dollar "Bills" are Bill Pine and Bill Thomas. They won their title by producing "sure-fire" box office pictures.

"We're out to show a profit," admitted Thomas the loquacious half of the team. "So far we have never failed." Their "Manhandled," starring Dorothy Lamour and Dan Duryea, came close to breaking their record, but it is expected to limp out of the red ink.

Hollywood was surprised to learn that the Pine-Thomas duo was making "The Lawless," a picture about anti-Mexican prejudice against Americans of Mexican origin. Such films were considered to be a gamble.

Gimmicks Sell

But, as Variety stated last week in one of its charcteristic headlines, "Gimmick The Only No-No Nix". Translated into everyday English, that means that pictures with some new gimmick or theme (such as "Pinky" and "All The King's Men) are succeeding at the box office while most other films are faring poorly.

"All the public wants," explained Thomas, "is something new. They want to be sure they aren't seeing the same thing they saw last week and the week before.

"That means you can't give 'em the old theme of a guy jumping on a moving train into a moving automobile. Meaningless action doesn't pay off any more. You have to give them something to think about."

Discouraged

Thomas said he had trouble convincing the powers to allow "The Lawless", his releasing company, Paramount, tried to discourage the picture.

The Johnston office also frowned on the project, declaring it did not show decency and good light.

"But they raved after seeing the finished picture," said Thomas. "They want to allow it to the U.N."

"The world's greatest love story . . .

. . . is the story of 'Samson and Delilah' . . . the romance that has captured and inflamed the imagination of the world for more than three thousand years. It is the one drama that I have always felt compelled to bring to the screen since I made my first motion picture thirty-seven years ago. Now, after fourteen years of research and preparation, beginning in 1935, the might and magnificence of 'Samson and Delilah' are here for you to share.

Here is a production whose very size and power is a tribute to the thousands of technicians, artists and craftsmen whose skill and talent brought it alive. Here is a story of love and faith, brutality and kindness, despair and hope, strength and weakness, blood and fire.

I promise that in 'Samson and Delilah' you will see something in motion pictures that you have never seen before. Here—for me—is the climax of thirty-seven years of motion picture making, the dream of a lifetime come true."

SCOTT'S SCRAP BOOK By R. J. SCOTT

Little Benny's Note Book

I was taking a Saturday walk with pop to celebrate the swell weather, and Mr. Magee stopped to talk to pop, saying, How is the world treating you?

Like a king, pop said. I cant complain at all. In fact I cant understand why anybody complains. The country was never in a soundition, wet blankets and stamp brains to the contrary. As far as I'm concerned, life is a bed of roses and I go to bed early and sleep late, he said.

It sounds good if you dont wake up, Mr. Magee said.

And he kept on going, and pritty soon pop stopped to shake hands with Mr. Twitchitt, saying, Did you ever see sutch perfect weather.

It would be all the same to me if it was raining, with bizzness the way it is, Mr. Twitchitt said. But I suppose I shouldn't complain, because I know it's going to be we 're, he said.

I know just how you feel, pop said. The only way I can keep my own head above the surface is by constantly tredding water. I've chased the wolf away from the door so often I'm almost sorry for the hungry brute. It wouldn't seem so bad if I could see a silver lining here and there, but every time I take a medium dark cloud and tern it around, I find the lining is coal black. The only way I ever pick up a good luck horse shoe is to have one planted on the seet of my pants by a horse that's still wearing it. Well I'll see you at somebody's funeral, he said.

And we kept on going, and I said, G. oop, you didn't sount that way with Mr. Magee, and pop said, That's because Mr. Twitchitt is a confirmed grumbler, but I like him just the same, so I thawt I'd treat him to the luxury of pisying somebody elts. And he started to whissle like somebody feeling better instead of worse.

STIRLING

Rotary Club Sponsors Fine Variety Show

Stirling — Almost 500 people attended the big variety show in Stirling Theatre on Tuesday evening. The show was sponsored by the Rotary Club of Stirling in aid of crippled children's work and featured Stanley St. John and assisting artists from Toronto.

The audience were thrilled with the artistry of the visiting artists, including Stanley St. John, as pianist and master of ceremonies; Ernest Adams, baritone; Jack McLean, impersonator; Margaret Brenton, comedienne; Dorothy Steadman, dancer; Art and Mabel McGuinness, Swiss Bell ringers; and Bert Meachin, on the drums.

Each artist received plenty of applause after each performance and was called back for encores.

Rotarian C. I. Hation welcomed the audience on behalf of the Stirling Club and introduced Mr. St. John, master of ceremonies.

The performance opened with a military dance number by Dorothy Steadman, and for ten and a half hours the audience was treated to an outstanding performance.

Jack McLean proved a most versatile artist in his impersonations of such well-known radio stars as Charlie McCarthy, Mortimer Snerd; Lum and Abner; Amos and Andy; Rudy Vallee; George Formby; Bing Crosby; and Frank Sinatra, while his wife Margaret Brenton brought down the house with her impersonations of Gracie Fields and Betty Hutton, in "Lead me to the Altar Waller" in which she was assisted by Rotarian Walter Elliott, which was the hit of the show.

Swiss Bell Ringers

Art and Mabel McGuinness, Swiss Bell Ringers, captivated the audience with their skill and technique in bell ringing, while Ernest Adams, baritone, brought quick appreciation from the audience with his versatility and rich voice. His numbers ranged from operatic selections to popular airs. Instrumental duets by Stanley St. John, piano, and Bert Meachin on the drums, were also well received by the audience.

During an intermission in the program, Dr. W. Cornett spoke on the work of the Rotary Club with underprivileged children in the community.

Following the performance, the visiting artists were entertained in the community hall by the Rotarians and their wives.

Jersey City, N. J. — The Irishmen were arguing Thursday night in a tavern about exactly what the angle of slant was of the rooftops from which riflemen fired in Ireland's Easter Monday Rebellion of 1916.

The pre-St. Patrick's Day argument grew hot. When a fight seemed imminent, the bartender put in a Trans - Atlantic telephone call to William Sweetman, editor of the Irish Press in Dublin.

It is not recorded just what information the slant of the rooftops was in 1916, but it settled the dispute.

The phone call cost the bartender $15.

One deer species, originating in China, sheds its antlers twice every year, This is the Pere David deer, also called the Donkey-Tailed deer, a pair of which is being added to the zoological collection at Whipsnade.

What becomes of the thousands of antlers shed every year? Only a small percentage are carried off as souvenirs of the hunt. Field mice and other small rodents devour the rest. Equipped with the same kind of sharp, ever-growing incisor teeth which enable the beaver to cut down trees, these smaller rodents nibble away the antlers to the last particle for winter fodder, fodder often buried beneath the snow, but easily reached via the unseen runways of the mice.

"Pauline" is the simple inscription on the rock-hewn shrine erected to the memory of Pauline Johnson, Indian poetess, who died in Vancouver on March 7, 1913. Above it tower the giant cedars that Captain George Vancouver saw in 1790, and the sea is so near that its murmur can be heard, and all about is the grandeur and beauty of Stanley Park.

When Pauline Johnson (Tecahionwake) was born near Brantford, Ont., in 1862, what is now the vast city of Vancouver was a region of primeval forest. In 1886, when her poetry was first attracting notice, the "Queen of the Coast" as she called that city, first came into being. And in February of that year, the greatest of all the mighty trees on Hastings street was cut down at what is now the northeast corner of Burrards and Granville streets, the very heart of the city. Of majestic height, it had a diameter of 14 feet 4 inches.

Field Mice Devour Great Bulk Of Deer Antlers Shed Annually

Written for The Canadian Press
By PERCY GHENT

From the forests of the Maritime Provinces to those on the foothills of British Columbia thousands of deer antlers are shed every year.

Antlers of the lordly elk, or wapiti, are commonly five feet long. Moose antlers in some mature specimens have a spread of six feet. They are shed and regrown every year.

Shedding is preceded by a breaking down of the cellular structure close to the animal's head, and the antlers crack off, apparently in a painless parting. Over the site of fracture, skin grows, and from these antler stumps, new antlers grow.

Growth is strikingly fast — as much as half an inch each day until the new adornment is completed. During this rapid development, the antlers are covered by a protective skin which has much to do with the progress of the horny growth. Known as the "velvet" it is dispensed with in strips when the antlers have reached full development.

One deer species, originating in China, sheds its antlers twice every year, This is the Pere David deer, also called the Donkey-Tailed deer, a pair of which is being added to the zoological collection at Whipsnade.

Boys Plan Holidays In Norwegian Arctic

London — (CP) — Fifty English schoolboys will soon start preparations for spending their summer holidays in Norway's Arctic Circle.

The boys, all between 16½ and 18, will travel 17 feet apart in uninhabited country which has never been properly mapped before.

Mapping it will be one of the jobs they will carry out. Others will be to collect scientific specimens and notes on birds, mammals, insects, plants and minerals for the British Museum.

They will also make short-wave radio experiments and take with them photographic and cinematograph equipment.

To qualify for the expedition, organized by the British Schools Exploring Society, the boys have to be selected at a special interview.

They must be adventurous, good mixers; physically fit and able to look after themselves when there is nobody to help them.

Dude College

By Oren Arnold

The thought hurt deeply. He had felt that Miss Bailey was a sincere, kindly girl although a famous and most vivacious one. But, Wesley told himself dejectedly, he might have known better. Who was he to expect such bounty from—what was it that radio columnist called her?—Antarctica's most complatic somebody? Still, the other wealthy lovely girls at Pueblo U. were seldom cruel; usually they were as democratic as the average American.

His thoughts grew blacker and blacker as he left the moonbathed countryside and came within the village lights of Pueblo again, and so without realizing it he pulled up at his home. His mother was on the porch, rocking.

"Why son, didn't you go to the dance?" Mrs. York sensed something. She scooted her chair.

"Uh, not yet, mother. I—I had to come back for something, that's all."

A fellow has to bluff. To keep face. He forced a casual manner went to his room, then out again and drove off in his old car. And by this time he was definitely angry, hence more reasonable.

"I've got to go to that dance anyway," he reminded himself. "Family members are expected to and I am chief student contact. They look to me, Besides—she—"

Dr. Woodrow Wesley York usually drove with dash. But he disregarded two stop signs as he drove recklessly to the beautiful college gymnasium. A new zint had come into his eyes.

When he walked into the big room, already gay with music and laughter, he held his head up in full pride. If, he said to himself, I do see Ronica Bailey, I shall meet her coolly and proceed about my own business; a man can do those things and feel no shame.

He glanced hastily around. No, she wasn't here yet. But across the room he did discover that sequiddity, a red-eyed girl, Lona Montoya, the one who had just registered this year from away down in Vera Cruz, and who had suffered an unfortunate accident. Even now she got to holding her crutch. He crossed to her.

"Dr. Wesley York!" Lona beamed sweetly at him, "Isn't everything so lovelee tonight?"

"Inspiring you, Miss Montoya," said Wesley, which was a saying thing for him to say, "I can see so sorry you cannot dance with the others. May I, uh, may I request at least one dance with here with you. Just conversing."

"Oh Wesley!" Lona dropped the title. "You are too kind."

"Not at all! It is a pleasure for me. I, uh, mean it is a privilege."

"So did I, I wanted so to be here, but I would not accept from a man who might ask me for a date, because I can not dance tonight. But thees music—c-oh! Is lovelee!"

"To tell you the truth, Lona," Wesley dropped a title too, and was plunging on courageously "I came alone in the hopes that I might, uh, find just this opportunity to—to be with you!"

He swallowed hard; but nothing came of it. Lona lemerstyr looked merely smiled and said more thanks. After that Wesley was more at ease. He rather tied to Lona in relief, for it was a dignified, logical way of escape from his predicament.

It occurred to him that, if Ronica Bailey did come in, she would see him here and so think he had brought Lona. If so, well and good! Then he could hold up his head in truth. It would, in effect proclaim to Ronica that he, too, knew Ronica had been just bailing him that afternoon in the airplane; that their "date" hadn't been taken seriously by either one.

The relief was almost physical to Wesley. He actually relaxed. After all, Lona Montoya was nobody's date and didn't look bashful of; she was beautiful, even if she was from a foreign land.

He turned to her with sudden enthusiasm and was being as courtly and as attentive as he knew how, ignoring the fact that music had ceased behind him and that college collegians were milling around in gay greetings to every one. He felt that he might actually enjoy this evening a bit.

He looked—quite without realizing it—closely at Lona Montoya's beautifully shaped, black eyes that sparkled with a strange exotic wisdom as well as with feminine charm. Something away back in his being contrasted those eyes with Ronica Bailey's violet ones, and this became momentarily disconcerting.

But then suddenly, his conversation and reveries were interrupted.

"Hey, for pete Q. sakes, Wesley York!" somebody was saying. "I thought you had a date this evening with me? Can you please tell me what's the idea of—"

He turned in consternation to face Ronica Bailey and the man Girardeau he had left at her home.

The sudden appearance of Ronica beside him, looking down with frank but quizzical eyes at Wesley York momentarily speechless. And then, when he remembered to stand up, he only succeed rather inanely.

"I—I—you—good evening! I—"

"But Wesley, I thought you really said you'd take me to the dance. Was I simply—mixed up?" Ronica said it earnestly, and Girardeau looked at the American girl.

"Oh! Oh no! No, Ronica, I—pardon me, Miss, uh, Miss Montoya, Miss Bailey, and—uh—"

"This is Andre Girardeau, Miss Montoya, and Dr. York, I thought daddy said you and Andre came together and so knew each other. The But I'm all mixed up about everything it seems."

Lona Montoya had only nodded. Andre said nothing but looked on coldly. For a long moment nobody else spoke, either, and after wailing for Wesley to stop pointing awkwardly at her and trying to say something, Ronica suddenly smiled. Music resumed at that instant, and so she took Wesley's hand and put her arm around him

"Let's dance, then talk, Wesley. All right?"

"Oh, I—yes! We must—I am afraid I dance very poorly indeed, I—you see I dance only a very little, for the sake of study at the university affairs, and —"

"You're doing beautifully. It's just an easy one-two one-two step, easy as—as—Why don't you try my frills if you don't want to. Can you tell me what happened now? Didn't you really have a date with me?"

"Oh, Ronica!"

She laughed then, dancing very close to him. "You are sure lla that bad?"

"No, I mean—I did think I had a date, but—"

Ronica sighed elaborately. "Okay, pal, no hard feelings. I think I get it, even though it stings. The Montoya girl is lovely, all right."

"But Miz Bailey, you don't understand!" Wesley was appalled.

"So you've started "Missing" me again! Shall I go back to Dr. York?" I thought we had become friends."

It is doubtful if ever a young man suffered any more acutely than Wesley York suffered during this dance. His distraction inevitably caused him to stumble too. Twice he stepped embarrassingly on Ronica's dainty slipper, not once, but two times even so. When the dance was over she had guided him back over and to Andre Girardeau's girl again.

"Professional dancer, aren't you, Wesley?" Ronica laughed broadly.

"Hush Andre! Sarcasm is rude. I'm sorry you are injured, Miz Montoya." Ronica looked at the other girl and her clutch, but Lona's answering gaze was calculating.

"Rudeness seems to be contagious," Lona suggested, in flat tone.

"I don't think I understand."

Andre was looking haughtily and getting shot at on the border enough to make everybody overlook rudeness, Miss Bailey! We not Dr. York slitting with me! I did not hear him ask you to dance!"

"Oh!"

"Please," Wesley put in now, "let's not misunderstand anybody's uh, intentions. I am sure that—"

Andre interrupted, sarcastically. "Oh, indeed, ladies and gentlemen, Let's all pick daisies! Now seriously, Ronica, you are not straight. I want to know who—"

"Okay, boys!" Ronica's words were clipped and her chin went up, a signal Andre Girardeau at least recognized from past experience. "We're all sparring around the point so I'll talk plainly. Here's what—"

"Dr. York asked to take me to this dance. He came for me, I know, but somehow Andre managed to shoo him off. I still don't get that.

"But as for you, Miss Montoya, I did have a date with him and he won't deny it. If he wants to jilt me, he darn sure can. But he and I have words first, and we're going to start right there! Now you step here, Wesley and I are going off to stroll in the moonlight!"

Lona and Andre watched them go. The little clash had passed unnoticed by any of the other collegians present, even though a few boy and girls did wave or say hello to Lona, and several spoke to Wesley and Ronica as they left the room.

Andre sat down, uninvited. He was a trifle white at the corners of his mouth, but he turned to Lona and forced a sort of genial smile.

"Peppery kid, Ronnie," he began. "Mustn't take her seriously."

Plan 'Prize Money' For Service Benevolent Funds

Ottawa, March 18 (CP) — Despite criticisms and with $2,000,000 at stake, the government gave the House it is going ahead with the shattering of one of the oldest traditions of the sea.

Defence Minister Claxton gave notice on the Commons order paper he is ready to introduce a bill "to provide for the payment and distribution of prize money" arising out of the Second World War into service benevolent funds instead of to individual members of the services.

Officials said this means roughly $2,000,000 will be placed in the benevolent funds of the Royal Canadian Navy and the R.C.A.F. for the use of distressed or needy veterans or service members of the services.

The prize money comes from sale of enemy ships captured during the war and, if tradition were followed, would go to the individual men who fought that enemy on the seas.

The government, however, has decided that division of $2,000,000 among thousands of Canadian veterans would make the individual award so small as to be almost useless.

Wigless Solicitorr At a Disadvantage?

London — (CP) — The Law Society has turned down a suggestion that solicitors be allowed to wear wigs in court.

At present wigs are worn by barristers, the senior grade of British lawyers.

D. Napley, a solicitor, said wigs put barristers at an advantage in magistrates' courts when opposing counsel is a wigless solicitor.

He "said frequently legal clients blamed the wigless advocate, saying: "I'll get a proper solicitor next time."

Stanley Moore, opposing the proposal, said wigs and gowns are a lot of nonsense and an unnecessary expense. He urged that solicitors look to the future rather than the past.

Farmer Kills Wife, Son and Self

Demand for $500 Refused by Wife Neighbor Says

Rodney Tobacco Grower Dies in Front of Town Hall

Rodney, March 20 — (CP) — A 50-year-old tobacco farmer murdered his wife and stepson today in a quarrel over money, then committed suicide in an automobile outside the town hall of this Elgin county community 30 miles southwest of St. Thomas.

Police said Hungarian-born Lewis Sumegi Sr., 50, and her son, Louis Nagy, 26, with blasts from a shotgun. Dropping the shotgun and picking up a .22-calibre rifle, he drove the one mile into town and shot himself to death as a policeman approached.

The row which led up to the triple slaying started at the breakfast table, police said. Sumegi demanded $500 of the proceeds of last year's crop of tobacco grown on the farm, which was owned by Mrs. Sumegi. She refused.

Runs From Home

Tony Sabo, a neighbor, said Mrs. Sumegi ran from her house, entered the rear of his home and screamed: "Mrs. Sumegi seized a broom.

Seconds later, Sabo told police, Sumegi walked into the kitchen. Once again he demanded $500. Mrs. Sumegi again refused. With that, Sabo said, Sumegi raised the shotgun and, from a distance of three feet, fired at his wife.

Sumegi was calm, Sabo said.

"Excuse me, Tony," he quoted Sumegi as saying. "Good bye".

Sumegi put his hands on Sabo's shoulders, kissed him on the right cheek and stepped past Mrs. Sumegi's body and out the back door.

Sabo said he looked out a window and saw Nagy running toward the house. Nagy, apparently hearing the slaughter, stopped in his tracks, spoke briefly to the older man, turned and tried to flee.

Shot in Neck

Sumegi fired again, hitting Nagy in the back of the neck at the base of the skull. Nagy's body slithered into a puddle of blood. Sumegi walked calmly back to his own house, Sabo said.

Sabo ran to the home of Hazen Campbell and told what had happened. Campbell started for Rodney, made it in six or seven minutes and reported to Chief Constable Walter Hall, police chief.

POLICE INQUIRY NOT TO RESUME FOR ONE WEEK

Windsor, March 20—(CP)—The Windsor police commission's public inquiry into "allegations of corruption" will remain adjourned for at least a week, it was indicated today, while information is sought from Detroit police officials.

The three-man commission called adjournment Saturday after sitting for three half-day sessions and hearing 20 witnesses. The inquiry, called under provisions of the Ontario Police Act, was ordered by the commission following hints of police laxity made two weeks ago in a judgment by County Magistrate J. A. Hanrahan.

The charges were contained in Magistrate Hanrahan's judgment sentencing Joseph Assef to a maximum term of six months for keeping liquor for sale. Magistrate Hanrahan and Assef were the chief witnesses at opening of the inquiry Thursday.

Commission Counsel, Crown Attorney A. Douglas Bell of Chatham, was directed Saturday by the commission to approach Detroit officials and seek access to their files for "anything that might be of assistance to the inquiry."

Mayor Arthur J. Reaume, one of the commissioners, made the suggestion after observing that much has been said in the press about asking for police information from Detroit."

'Mercy Killing' Murder Case Will Be Heard Today

Cobourg, Ont., March 20 — (CP) — A grand jury today will study an indictment charging a 56-year-old retired mining engineer with the "Mercy killing" slaying of his mentally-ill wife.

Ralph Kilbon is alleged to have shot his wife with a .22-calibre rifle to end the suffering she inflicted on herself by trying to commit suicide with the same weapon.

The trial will go ahead Tuesday if the jury brings in a true bill. The Crown has subpoenaed 11 witnesses.

Irene Kilbon, one bullet in her stomach, another in her head, died Nov. 1 in a rocking chair in the kitchen of the Kilbon's 18-room brick farmhouse at Baillieboro, 15 miles northwest of this Lake Ontario town.

At Kilbon's preliminary, hearing four weeks later, witnesses quoted him as saying he "finished them off to end their misery" after she shot herself in the stomach.

QUEBEC PRELATES URGE REFORMS IN INDUSTRY

Priesthood to Carry Forward Church's Plan

Quebec, March 20 (CP)— The hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church in Quebec province, led by its three archbishops, advocates gradual reforms in industry to achieve the sharing by "organized labor" in "management, profit and property."

In a 30,000-word pastoral letter made public Sunday night, the episcopate urged the priesthood to carry forward the church's program of social action and called on all classes of society and the state to participate in the "re-establishment of the labor class on Christian principles."

The letter noted a shift Quebec from a rural to an industrial economy, creating a growing consciousness of its own importance. A resistance in "certain quarters" to labor's increased activity and a resultant "sentiment of injustice."

It set forth the duty of the episcopate as that of showing the "way to a sound re-establishment of the labor class."

It suggested "structural reforms" which would increase the workers' interest in the industry of which he is a part and bring the workers and employer to a better understanding of their common interests.

75-Oz. Nugget Starts Gold Rush In Australia

Sydney, Australia, March 20—(AAP)—The gold fever has hit again at Wedderburn, a tiny town 200 miles northwest of Melbourne.

The hamlet's permanent population of 1,100 has been swelled by hundreds of new arrivals since vegetable merchant Bert Smith found a 75-ounce nugget worth £1,100. ($2,695).

It's almost like the old days, 50 years ago, when Wedderburn was a rich gold town.

The local press arrivals, armed with pick and shovel, are pegging out claims and digging all day long.

The local prospectors are digging up their front and back lawns and even main street.

The local storekeeper, Ray Baker, has dug an eight-foot hole in his back yard.

But Bert Smith's nugget is so far the only spectacular find.

Propensity of Business Leaders To Attack High Taxes is Criticized

Seigniory Club, Que., March 20 (CP)— M. Grattan O'Leary, vice-president of The Ottawa Journal, today criticized business leaders for "their propensity to attack high taxes".

In a speech prepared for delivery before the annual meeting of the National Dairy Council, Mr. O'Leary said that businessmen leaders should be attacking is not the end result but the "acts and policies of governments which produce high taxes."

"Taxes are business, in opposing taxes on a general way or specifically should be "more shrewd in its timing," should attack them before or during a budgetary selection, not when the voting was over and a political party securely in power.

It all added up to the fact, Mr. O'Leary said, that it is about time business men came out from behind those desks and joined with farmers and workers in the practical job of politics.

"Our's is a parliamentary country," he said. "You may meet here at this convention and pass resolutions and utter the highest aspirations, but before those resolutions and aspirations are translated into action, somebody must get elected.

"That law will be passed by a parliament or a legislature, and it has to be better and wiser than the men who pass it."

Mr. O'Leary said the "clear duty" of Canadian business men is to see that the country has access to its parliaments and legislatures "represent the best brain, the best heart and the best conscience which our country can produce."

It was time business men awakened to the fact that Canada had no such thing as a free economy. Instead it was made up of a hodge-podge of bounties, subsidies, controls, price-ceilings and price-floors.

He had attended business conventions where delegates in one breath denounced government interference with business and in the next breath demanded something which involved even more of such interference.

"It is time business leaders grew up," Mr. O'Leary said, "and learned the political and economic facts of life."

14-Year-Old Girl Shoots Twin Sister Because of Hatred

Then said Dan B. Eymann, assistant District Attorney, Alice Richard "almost defiantly" told him:

"I hated her. I don't feel bad because my sister is dead, but I feel bad for my folks. This'll hurt them. I'd kill Sally again if I had the chance."

Sally Richard was killed by a single 22-calibre rifle slug into her brain as she lay sleeping about 3 a. m. She was one of 8 sons and daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Edgard V. Richard. None of the family heard the shot.

Eymann said a murder charge would be filed against Alice today.

The killing was an apparent case of what psychiatrists call sibling rivalry — rivalry between offspring of the same parents— said Sheriff J. W. Ripperdan. The twins were not identical.

Eymann quoted Alice as saying:

"I hated her because she was stupid and loud and always acting like a nut. I learned to hate her when we were in the sixth grade and ever since then this has built up."

Quarrelled Saturday Night

A quarrel Saturday evening over use of a telephone brought her antagonism to a boil.

But a brother, Edgard, 16, held Alice down while could use the phone, Alice screamed, "I'm going to kill you and I'm going to do it with a gun."

The girls got home about 2 a.m. from a skating party. Sally went to sleep. Alice lay awake brooding.

She arose, went through the darkened house, groped until she found her father's rifle and cartridges — and shot Sally.

Then she telephoned the sheriff's office and told them "There's been a murder."

That awakened her mother, who grabbed the phone and said: "Don't be so hasty. She's having a nightmare."

Alice led her mother to Sally's body.

The horrified mother called officers right back:

"It's true."

DIES IN HOSPITAL

Kingston, March 20. (CP)— Mrs. Peter McNeely, 79, died in hospital today of burns suffered when her clothing caught fire in her home last Monday.

Deny Two Atom Scientists Missing From Harwell Plant

London, March 20 (Reuters) — A supply ministry spokesman today denied that two atom scientists were missing from Harwell Atomic Energy Research establishment.

He was commenting on a report in the Daily Graphic which quoted top-level American-born atom scientists "have suddenly disappeared from Britain."

Scotland Yard also denied the report. A Yard spokesman said "we have no knowledge here regarding any story of the disappearance of two American-born atom science scientists."

He added that "furthermore, there has been no special branch detective on duty at Harwell over the weekend."

The Daily Graphic said that the two missing men were believed to have gone to the United States and Scotland Yard special branch had asked the Department of Investigation in Washington to find them.

The paper said that "both men, scientists in the highest category in atomic research, have been in Britain for some months and had access to much of the secret work carried on at Harwell."

Dr. Klaus Fuchs, atomic spy, for atom which Dr. Klaus Fuchs, convicted for passing atomic secrets to Russia, did his research.

The paper said a long code message about the missing men went from Britain to the United States in March, 1946, a week before Igor Gouzenko, Russian cipher clerk in Washington Sunday containing a statement of the Fuchs case, since they came to Britain.

The Daily Graphic said Canadian agents are waiting at every port and airfield to interview them," the paper said.

The supply ministry spokesman said he knew nothing that could justify such a report."

The Daily Graphic story added:

"While the search for them continues, the F.B.I. is continuing the Klaus Fuchs inquiry. Fuchs spy trial, a highly-placed informant said Sunday night that gaps in both sides of the Atlantic might be expected in two or three days.

"Information obtained by the British counter-espionage service since the arrest of Fuchs points to the fact that people were involved in the leakage of secrets, the Daily Graphic says.

"Today Scotland Yard's special branch, working hard to find out the reason for the sudden scientific disappearance, want to know whether there are other people involved with Fuchs."

But they may have been associated quite innocently with him is not overlooked, but the gravity of the inquiry is such that nothing is being left to chance."

ORDERS SECRET VOTE FOR CP EDITORIAL STAFFS

Labor Board Declines Union Certification

Ottawa, March 20 — (CP) — The Canada Labor Relations Board today ordered a vote to determine whether the American Newspaper Guild (C.I.O.) should be bargaining agent for editorial employees of The Canadian Press, the national news service.

The decision means that a government-supervised secret ballot will be taken among eligible employees designated by the Board as forming the bargaining unit in the editorial department. To be certified, the Union must get 51 per cent of the votes of those eligible.

What Board Decided

Each party in the contested application for certification—the CP and the Guild—claimed the majority and lost points in the Board decision. The outcome of major points:

1. The Board ordered the vote because of "some uncertainty or confusion" over whether the union had followed procedure under its constitution. The union filed cards from well over half the eligible employees.

1. The Guild failed to get the customary immediate certification despite the fact it filed union cards from well over half the eligible employees. The board ordered the vote because of "some uncertainty or confusion" over whether the Union had followed procedure under its constitution.

2. The Board upheld the CP's claim it has no jurisdiction over the commercial services. It considered these workers were "employees" under the meaning of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

3. Canadian Press was upheld in its contention that the CP bargaining unit could not include Press Wire Ltd., a subsidiary which buys news from CP, processes it and sells it to radio stations. The board ruled Press News was under separate management and ordered CP to restrict its employees of CP only. (The Guild could file a new application covering PN employees.)

4. The Guild and CP each won and lost on the question of who

9-Man Committee Reports On Soil Depletion, Drainage, Reforestation and Wildlife

Urges Conservation Officer With Deputy Minister Rank

Toronto, March 20 — (CP) — Ontario today got a down-to-earth blueprint for tackling its conservation problems.

A nine-man committee of the Ontario legislature tabled its 65,000-word report on a year-long study of soil depletion, drainage, flood control, reforestation, demonstration farms and soil analysis. It saw as the measure of its success the "condition of Ontario and its natural resources 50 or 100 years hence."

Among its chief recommendations were these:

1. Appointment of a chief conservation officer under the provincial premier and with the status of a deputy minister to co-ordinate conservation work of all government departments, particularly three—agriculture, lands and forests and planning and development;

2. Study of a system of piping water from the Great Lakes to communities in southwestern Ontario where potential or actual scarcity limits growth and industrial expansion;

3. Federation into one institution or three provincial colleges at Guelph — the Ontario Agricultural College, the Ontario Veterinary College and the Macdonald Institute of Home Economics — and co-operation with their activity of all the extension and research activities of the province's department of agriculture.

Couched In Practical Language

The committee gathered the material for its 183-page report, couched in practical language, from visits to 80 Ontario cities, towns and villages where it held public hearings. It received 111 submissions—83 from county and district organizations, 16 from provincial organizations and universities and 12 from individuals. It also studied on the spot a settlement experiment at La Sarre in Northwestern Quebec and conservation practices in Ohio, notably at Amber Louis Bromfield's Malabar Farm.

The report warned emphatically that wastage and depletion of Ontario resources had occurred on a large and significant scale.

"The very fact that they proceed in a more subtle and less spectacular way than in older areas tends to make them the more dangerous — there is the danger that we might be lulled into complacency. He who loses 4 inches of topsoil in 35 years has lost it—and he is no better off than he was if it is in the subsoil. One may proceed more slowly than the other—but the result in the end is the same.

"The hope of this committee is that Ontario will accept a conservation program worthy of the name while yet there is time, and that we may show our intelligence and vision by taking action before, rather than after, the event, so that desperate emergency measures of reclamation and rehabilitation will never become necessary in this province."

Chinese by Thousands Flee Areas In Shantung Stricken by Famine

By WILLIAM PARROTT

Hong Kong, March 20. (Reuters)—A new army was on the march in China today—civilians fleeing from famine-stricken areas in which between one-third and one-half of the population live.

The Chinese press here quoted a communist admission that "large numbers of people are fleeing" in Shantung which, with a population of 38,000,000, is China's second most populous province.

A top Chinese communist official—Jao Shu-Shih, vice-chairman of the People's Provincial government of Shantung—blamed the "poor leadership of irresponsible officials and their failure to cope with the emergency situation."

Reports reaching here earlier this month said thousands of people had perished in the famine, and millions more were living on leaves, roots, grass and clay.

In Anhwei province, described as the worst hit 2,000,000 of the 22,000,000 inhabitants were said to be starving. The situation also was reported serious in Kiangsu.

The official communist news agency announced today that the Peiping Government's Ministry of Health was organizing seven anti-epidemic corps to tour the famine-stricken areas.

Serious anti-communist guerrilla activities meanwhile, were reported today from three parts of Kwangtung province, in the south-east.

Kwangtun, with 22,000,000 inhabitants, is the fourth most populous province and a region of seasonal shortage.

In one case 600 armed guerrillas ambushed a river convoy and seized two boatloads of rice as well as machine-guns and rifles.

DAIRY INDUSTRY RENEWS FIGHT AGAINST OLEO

Seigniory Club, Que., March 20. (CP)—J. H. Duplan today renewed the dairy industry's fight against margarine with the charge that the "organized campaign" of some profit-making and subversive groups has resulted in Canada being "literally flooded with foreign oils."

The president of the National Dairy Council told its annual meeting that unless this "flood" of foreign oils—required to manufacture margarine—is controlled by tariffs and other means, the butter industry and the Canadian economy as a whole may face "economic chaos."

Some 200 delegates, representing more than 800 dairy plants and 23 dairy associations, gathered to hear Mr. Duplan's report and to attend the three-day conference that will try to forge some formidable weapon against the effects of margarine and of declining foreign markets for Canadian dairy products.

Mr. Duplan disclosed to the representatives of dairy manufacturers, processors and distributors that this weapon could be found in a high-powered $500,000-a-year publicity campaign to spread the merits of dairy food products.

Two Apprehended After Long Chase Through City

It was exciting while it lasted but four members of the city police department, who Saturday night co-ordinated their efforts in bringing down the fleeing motorist, are still wondering what the chase was all about.

Two police cars, one in front of the chase from Front Street throughout the extent of Foster Ward, the fleeing motorist being apprehended at the end of a dead-end street in front of the Stephens-Adamson Manufacturing Co. Ltd. plant on Bridge Street.

Shortly before midnight Saturday, Inspector J. C. Hayes and Constable Ken Bell were cruising Front Street, when opposite the Warden Hotel they cut in front and commenced weaving up the street. A break in the traffic to cut in front at the city hall in an attempt to back off the car, failed. The chase was elusive.

He swung his car down McAnnary Street and turned south on Pinnacle where the police cruiser driven by Constables Minaker and Thomson took up the chase. The chase then continued down Pinnacle east on St. Paul Street, Thomson in the pursuing motorist crashed the iron gates leading to the Stephens-Adamson property. Jammed fenders and splintered headlamps were evidence of the force of the impact.

Inside the enclosure in front of the factory the motorist saw he was cornered so he and a second man hopped out of the auto only to have the officers intercept them.

Changes in legislation governing conservation authorities — boards or committees responsible for conservation projects—to provide for raising money from municipalities benefiting directly or indirectly; or from a limited area of a municipality.

Broadening government financial assistance to conservation authorities by allowing larger grants where the municipalities are largely rural and by allowing substantial grants toward engineering costs to help build up a backlog of public works.

Dominion-Provincial agreement on financing and participating in "pilot farms," operated by practical farmers, for applying research findings in a practical way.

To combat erosion, research should be undertaken on intensity and frequency of rainfall and its relation to soil types to absorb water; use of fall and winter cover crops; effectiveness of fall versus spring plowing; width of crop strips in relation to control of water and wind erosion.

For farm under drainage, planning and inspection services of the O.A.C. and the Kemptville Agricultural School should be expanded. Research should be conducted on Ontario's various soil types to determine best drainage methods; effective inspection of tile drainage projects and of tile manufacture was urged.

Should Amend Act

The Municipal Drainage Act should be amended to provide Act abandoning unsound or uneconomic drains; a municipal transport called for a president and three deans—of agriculture, veterinary science and engineering—Ica. A 12-member board of regents would act on the latter's recommendations on policy, administration and finance. Linked with this move is a recommendation that officials of the Provincial Department of Agriculture, including those engaged in administration of legislation or inspection work, should be transferred from Guelph onto to Guelph. There was a call for integration of the agricultural extension, services and special training in radio and television for those engaged in conservation program.

Research specialists in animal genetics and statistical design of research should be appointed to the O.A.C.

The Provincial Government should investigate the responsibility of providing long term credit through some agency to assist young farmers to get started established on their own farms.

Until there is a detailed land use survey with favorable findings, no new townships or areas in Northern Ontario should be opened for settlement. When areas are opened for settlement, it is urged that community forests. The Crown should consider recovery of surface rights it yielded in mining purposes before 1918.

Water

As a flood control measure, land-use practices tending to wastage, depletion or erosion of soil must be discontinued and a farm land conservation program for soil cover should be restored to non-arable lands. River-gauging stations should be set up under direct supervision of the Dominion Water Power Bureau and under the Federal government should be urged to extend hydrologic studies on streams. The building of reservoirs for flood control should be undertaken by the Federal provincial and municipal governments. Use of tugs or ice breakers to open channels during spring should be studied.

To increase water supply, a detailed study should be made of feasibility and cost of piping great lakes water to drought areas on a public utility basis to parallel municipal waterworks. Research should be pushed regarding ground-water supply of urban and industrial areas. The government should arrange a conference of the U.S. and Canada on ground-water studies.

Research work was urged on design and construction of farm ponds. The Department of Lands and Forests should assist farmers to build old dams at strategic spots. All governments should act to study and combat erosion and municipalities should have authority to restrict or prohibit further building in danger zones.

Forestry

Steps should be taken to encourage farm woodlot owners to extension of fire prevention services and amending by the Federal government and province of income-tax regulations so landowners would be penalized for cropping timber under conservation practice The report said that if a farmer cuts his entire woodlot for complete cutting it was classed a capital receipt and not taxed. If he cropped it each year and sold the cut, it was taxable income.

The province should undertake reforestation of approximately 3,600 square miles of the pre-Cambrian Shield area in the next 25 years, it recommended a joint program with the Federal government. Provincial and Federal forest nurseries should be expanded. The plans should provide for recreation areas in reforested zones.

Urban municipalities should be permitted to purchase land outside their limits for reforestation. Where absolute title is required for fixed assessment of lands reforested by municipalities.

For private reforestation, the Department of Lands and Forests should make tree-planting machines and personnel available for plots of five acres or more of private lands. When the owner agree that the reforested area be managed under forest management, he would pay only part of the cost. Where there was no agreement, he would pay the full cost.

A nominal charge should be made for tree nursery stock, free distributed free by the Department of Lands and Forests.

Research was urged in method and species most suitable for reforesting Ontario's pre-Cambrian Shield, its limestone plains and marshy or poorly-drained areas.

Fish and Wildlife

The government should provide for further fundamental research to acquire knowledge of the natural factors controlling fish and wildlife populations.

The problem of game-warden patrol of the vast areas of Northern Ontario should be met by regulations provided that non-resident hunters and anglers in the area had to be guided. Instruction courses should be held at the Ontario Forest Ranger School in Haliburton to train an adequate number of guides.

Recreation

The province should acquire lands suitable for recreational use and formulate definite policy for public recreation areas in Southern Ontario. It should also acquire lands fronting reservoirs on the St. Lawrence Seaway and power development for public recreation.

Education

Publication and distribution of educational literature for children and adults should be continued and more use should be made of radio and motion pictures to tell the story of conservation. The Department of Lands and Forests —with help from departments of highways, education and travel—should intensify its campaign for the acceleration of fire in the woods. Greater emphasis should be given to teaching conservation in rural and urban elementary and secondary schools. The province's colleges and universities should consider whether their courses pay enough attention to conservation both as a science and in its bearing on projects.

Conservation Authorities

Work of conservation authorities—actually commissions or boards set up to carry out specific conservation projects—should be broadened by appointment of representatives to integrate the plans and to serve as liaison between the province's authority and government departments.

The Conservation Authorities Act of Ontario should be amended to provide for financial assistance from municipalities which receive either direct or indirect benefit.

A Permit a municipality to raise money from that part of its area benefiting from conservation work.

The Ontario government in co-operation with municipalities should allow larger grants for flood control where municipalities are willing to provide for substantial grants for engineering to help build up a backlog of public works in case of need.

The Federal provincial governments should reach agreements on financing and participating in conservation work on forests, flood control reservoirs and water supply.

Provincial Administration

The Prime Minister's department should have responsibility for co-ordinating conservation policy nd program. Administration should be under a chief of engineering with the status of deputy minister, to co-ordinate conservation work of the department departments. Estimates for conservation work should be submitted through the Prime Minister department even when spent by the Lands and Forests. There should have a standing committee on conservation to study the program and work each year.

Miscellaneous

Under this heading, the report dealt with weed control urging that the federal government amend its legislation to prohibit the sale of noxious weeds. An Ontario of "unclessed screenings" or "refuse screenings" and to prohibit mixing either with any other cattle feed. It also asked that the federal government experiments to speed up research aimed at destroying wild mustard and of weed seeds going into feeds or seed mixtures.

Tear-Gas Bomb Drives Out Students

Hamilton, Mar. 20 (CP). Someone tossed a tear-gas bomb into the men's residence at McMaster University Saturday and more than 30 occupants were forced out into the cold. While no one was seriously affected, one student, executive called it "a prank beyond reasonable proportions".

RABY-SITTER RAPED, BLAIN

Columbia, Mo., March 20 (AP) — A 13-year-old baby-sitter was raped and slain Saturday night in the third criminal incident involving baby-sitters in the same general neighborhood within recent months. Prosecuting attorney Carl Sapp said Janett Christman, a high school student, died after a "terrific struggle."

Wants Land-Use Surveys To Precede Any Settlement Schemes in Northern Ont.

Toronto, March 20 — (CP) — The Ontario Legislature's committee wants land-use surveys to precede any new settlements schemes in northern Ontario.

In its report tabled in the legislature, the committee says that no new townships or areas should be opened for settlements unless there is a survey with favorable findings.

The committee was referring particularly to the clay belt area in the province's north. It mentioned that not all lands in the clay belt were well suited for farming. And the northern farmer had enough handicaps—what with transportation costs markets and climate—without the added burden of living on unproductive soil.

Such surveys might indicate further uses to which the area could be cut and economic demand in any would set the pattern for future development.

The report noted that it doesn't take long for a settler in the new area into a farm, but it takes 60 years to make a forest unproductive if the farm doesn't pan out. Mistakes in agricultural settlement were costly to the economy of the province as well as to the individual.

Tied Up By Liens

However, there were many well-developed agricultural lands in the north tied up by liens under the Mortgage Securities Act. In some cases the settlers had moved away, leaving properties in many cases were larger than the original loan—for buying seed, feed and, in some cases, equipment. The report suggested the Act should be cancelled and the areas resettled.

Because of the value of forest in an agricultural economy, a percentage of new settlement areas should be set aside as community forests within which lots could be granted for cutting permits, the report said.

It called attention to lands tied up in mining claims. Before 1918 such grants carried with them the right to claim all sub-surface rights. Grants since 1918 were limited to sub-surface rights. The report said the province should consider regaining surface rights. Where the land was agricultural, the grants held up settlement. Where they were suitable for only forest, they were charges that they were cut without regard for future growth.

Child Dies from Drinking Fuel Oil from Drip Pan

Boston, March 20 (AP)—Joseph Fitzpatrick, 14 months, died in agony after drinking fuel oil from a drip pan beneath a kitchen range in his home. Police said the child drank the oil while his mother was washing dishes with her back turned to him.

KINDNESS REPAID

Halifax (CP)—Arthur Colwell who was given a place to sleep in the police station cells, committed in court to stealing a watch and clock from his benefactor, Claude Mauger. It was kind of a mean theft said Magistrate Arthur A. T. Hickey. Colwell, who had a police record, was sentenced to two years in prison.

Report Requests Reforestation Plan in Pre-Cambrian Shield

Toronto, March 20. (CP)—A reforestation program, financed jointly by the provincial and federal governments, was proposed today in the Ontario legislature's committee on conservation.

The report, tabled in the legislature, urged that the reforestation be started in the pre-Cambrian Shield area which lies south of the French and Mattawa Rivers and extends to the Georgian Bay to the St. Lawrence River near Brockville and to the Upper Ottawa River.

It suggested that 3,600 square miles of the 23,000 square miles in the shield be reforested in the next 25 years. The province's government's present tree nursery production is not large enough to meet the demands of the program and areas should be set aside for community forests, it said.

The report emphasized the value of parks, recreation areas as well as public forestry. A well-managed forest became a self-sustaining crop of trees that generals which became exhausted, it said, could be replaced by trees and it was becoming more important all the time from an industrial standpoint.

Federal income tax regulations handicapped proper development of farm woodlots. A farmer who tended his woodlot and cropped it carefully had to pay income tax on the revenue it brought him, while a farmer who cut down his entire woodlot for complete cutting could claim the income as capital gain and it was taxed at 50%. The federal government should be asked to change the regulations so the cropping farmer would not be penalized.

Provide Fire Protection

There should be provided fire protection for woodlots in southern Ontario, the report said. And it wanted the Ontario Tree Conservation Act amended to empowered counties to pass by laws restricting cutting of trees on woodlots and making it compulsory in all areas.

The report referred municipal forests. It asked that urban municipalities be empowered to purchase lands beyond their limits for reforestation purposes and the province should be empowered to lend a fixed assessment basis on reforested areas.

As to private reforestation, the report said there was a tendency to look to the government to do what they cost nothing. So it suggested the Department of Lands and Forests make a nominal charge for the nursery stock it distributed free. It also proposed make cost of lands and forests free-planting machinery and that forestation of plots of five acres or more on the owner to pay part of the cost if he entered into an agreement for forest management. If the cost if there were no agreement.

It estimated that its reforestation proposals called for 4,000,000,000 trees. The number planted to date was 221,196,000 leaving 3,778,804,000 trees to be planted. Planting stock in 1949 was 17,700,970. It would take 150,000,000 trees a year, it recommended program into effect.

Industrial Expansion Under Way Uncertainty of Water Supply

Toronto, March 20—(CP)—Ontario should consider whether it is economically possible, and if not cost, to pipe water from the Great Lakes to inland communities, the Ontario legislature committee on conservation said today.

Industrial expansion in the province is limited by the uncertainty of the water supply, the committee said in its report tabled in the legislature. The Grand River Valley, Stratford, Kitchener are experiencing great industrial expansion. Other cities and communities depended on ground water and the supply was no longer adequate.

About 10 years ago the village of West Lorne in Elgin county began piping water from Lake Erie, nine miles away. Recently it extended the supply by gravity to the villages of Rodney and Dutton. Other, municipalities might attempt similar works and there was danger of a patch-work scheme of municipal piping.

The report suggested that Ontario study the possibility and cost of distribution of lake water as a public utility to participating municipalities. The water would be distributed somewhat as sleeping asked to change the regulations

It called for fundamental research to acquire knowledge of the natural factors controlling fish and wildlife populations.

The committee was referring particularly to the clay belt area in the province's north. It mentioned that not all lands in the clay belt were well suited for farming. And the northern farmer had enough handicaps—what with transportation costs markets and climate—without the added burden of living on unproductive soil.

Such surveys might indicate further uses to which the area could be cut and economic demand in any would set the pattern for future development.

The report noted that it doesn't take long for a settler in the new area into a farm, but it takes 60 years to make a forest unproductive if the farm doesn't pan out. Mistakes in agricultural settlement were costly to the economy of the province as well as to the individual.

Tied Up By Liens

However, there were many well-developed agricultural lands in the north tied up by liens under the Mortgage Securities Act. In some cases the settlers had moved away, leaving properties in many cases were larger than the original loan—for buying seed, feed and, in some cases, equipment. The report suggested the Act should be cancelled and the areas resettled.

CANADIAN RED CROSS SERVICES

The Red Cross stands as an organization which is doing a work for the good of humanity. It acts and it speaks with a voice that should appeal to every person everywhere.

This great organization finds ever new forms of expression as it adds to the services it is rendering for the sake of men, women and children everywhere. Wherever there is a pressing need there the kindly service of the Red Cross is found.

What it is doing in Canada is a work of supreme importance in many forms. Mention need only be made of services in times of calamity or when the Red Cross establishes the blood bank or is a potential saver of lives through the courses of training in life saving and in educating the people in the ways of open water.

Wholehearted endorsation of this great organization in its cause of helping suffering humanity must be and is the attitude of the public towards this society which serves in so many ways.

SPRING AT HAND

With ten days yet to go the month may provide further demonstrations of the infinite variety of weather that may come. In some years March is the month which provides dramatic changes but this year most of the winter months have proven that fairly cold weather can be mixed up with moderate temperatures in the space of a few hours.

Winter's shackles are falling away. If there were any signs that a severe early March would set in, they have long since been dispelled. Proof of this is seen in the orderly manner in which the rivers and creeks are opening up. In some others the streams were unusually turbulent, but the ice is quietly yielding without the usual thrust. Conditions have been favorable to this outcome while another factor is that the season has in spite of considerable cold spells the impression the month gives is that it is one of the moderate ones whatever the next week and a half may bring forward.

THE FITTING WORD

The care which a master of the English tongue will take to use the perfect word is shown in an article in the Ottawa Journal in which attention is drawn to the fact that in 1941 Mr. Churchill made reference to Sir Harry Lauder in the Commons as "that great old minstrel" instead of "that great old comedian" which he had first intended using. He thought it over on a train journey and decided that "minstrel" was a more apt word for the Scottish singer. "What an improvement! I am so glad I found the right word for one, who, by his inspiring songs and valiant life . . . ," said the statesman.

People are fortunate to live in a time when so great an artist of English has been so widely read and so eagerly listened to as Mr. Churchill not only for his message but for that matchless flow of language which places him among the masters, and helps others to improve their language.

No word was more fitting than the word "minstrel" for the artist whose voice was heard in many parts of the earth bringing those homelike and homely songs and sentiments of Scotland to not only his native Scotland but to his world audience.

Sir Harry's songs used the right words and so did Mr. Churchill in speaking of the great Scots singer whose songs though Scottish have been universal in their appeal.

The Journal notes that men of genius don't just dash off their songs and stories and speeches. These are the result of hard work and the great writer in song or speech, like he who has a genius for taking pains, as Michelangelo said many centuries ago, "trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle."

SIGN OF SPRING

King Winter in the lap of spring
I know may still be lingering
And many bitter winds may blow
Before he may decide to go
But, I one certain sign have seen
That soon the fairways will be green.

We still may have to shovel snow
Before the tulips start to grow,
It's much too soon, though skies are fair,
To change to lighter underwear.
But, still I think it safe to say
The spring draws nearer every day.

The robins I no longer trust.
They northward come because they must,
Nor as the mercury down goes
The robins shiver when it snows.
More swallows I must see than one
Before I'm sure that winter's gone.
But still the surest proof I have
That spring is here or just close by,
I've tested it from year to year
And this is no doubt that spring is near
When sailing once again I see
The golfing parson on the ice.

MacKenzie's Column:
Talk of Creation Of Dominions In Caribbean Area

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press News Analyst)

One of the most dramatic political developments of the day is proceeding among both the British and non-British colonial possessions in the great Caribbean area but with such little fanfare that it has attracted small attention.

The three of the widely distributed blocks of territory and the mother countries are discussing the creation of new dominions. These dominions would have sovereignty but remain a part of their respective Commonwealths. The fundamental impulse behind these projects is similar in both cases, and is succinctly summarized by an authoritative British source in dealing with its own project:

Value of Groups

"During the last 20 years it has been recognized more and more that a group of neighboring colonies can gain economic and social advantages by co-operating and by sharing their resources and in some areas the results of administrative centralization particularly in the technical fields have been very encouraging. One of the areas where this is true is from centralization is the British West Indies, where many of the colonies are small and poor in natural resources."

The British possessions reach from British Guiana, on the Atlantic coast of South America, clear across the Caribbean to British Honduras. That area also includes Barbados, Jamaica, Trinidad, Tobacco and the British islands in the Leeward and Windward groups.

In total figures this means an area of 99,962 square miles with a population of 2,960,000.

Britain is proceeding to the goal of dominion status along somewhat different lines from the Dutch. The British government proposes to establish a federation first, and then the West Indies Union status. The Dutch plan to proceed directly to the creation of two dominions.

Dutch Group

The Dutch group, is of course, far smaller. Its chief unit is the big state of Dutch Guiana (Surinam), with its population of 212,000, on the northern coast of South America. Then there are The Netherlands West Indies with the Dutch possessions among the Leeward Islands and the group comprising Aruba, Curacao and Bonaire. They have a population of 148,000.

Surinam and the West Indies form two distinct units. Actually Surinam has a local government which gives it complete autonomy in its internal affairs. This is extended to be an interim affair, leading to the commonwealth project. A similar interim constitution has been offered the West Indies, but it hasn't been accepted due, it is said, to jealousies among the islands.

PITCHING HORSESHOES

By Billy Rose

HUGGER-MUGGER IN THE AUTOMAT

As a burglaree, I've been doing a considerable amount of hanging around police stations lately, and I've made a highly profitable discovery—the average New York detective is plenty smart. Considering how few of them there are, gets plenty of results.

To give you an idea of what the ordinary cop can do once he gets going, let me tell you the story of Detective Patrolman Marc-Veigh and how he solved the case usually referred to as "Hugger-Mugger in the Automat."

One morning in August, 1932, two people died suddenly and within a few minutes of each other in the clockless-slot restaurant at Broadway and 104th Street. One, a dowdy old dame named Zaidee Bloodgood, fell over in the restraunt's mezzanine and the other, a middle-aged Armenian named Harry Jellinek, was found outside the little boy's room in the basement. The second corpse certified that both deaths were caused by a powerful dose of cyanide of potassium.

Was it a case of double murder? Or was it suicide? Or, was it murder and suicide?

Detective Patrolman MacVeigh was handed this sizzling spud, and went about coolling it off not like the Keystone cops but in a very ordinary policeman. He started by questioning everyone in the restaurant when the victims lived; inch-by-inched the tenement flat and the cubical hole in homes; jig-sawed together a lot of biographical bits and pieces, and came up with a solution so simple that no one connected with the case could imagine why it hadn't been thought of right away.

Jellinek's past was reconstructed easily enough. Starting as a barber in the East Side, he managed to save enough to buy his own cute, little business, and his garage had prospered until the depression hit it. When things got tough, he borrowed $150 from a bank, and when he couldn't meet the note on July 1, was threatened with foreclosure.

Figuring he had nothing to live for, he purchased $3 worth of powdered cyanide and then, with the price tag still attached, he poppyseed roll at the Automat. He dug a hole in the basement for him, bit off as much as he could chew and headed for the men's room. At the foot of the stairs he collapsed and died.

So far, so clear. Marc-Veigh went to work on Lillian Rosenfeld. She had been a harmless old bat who scavenged around junk heaps, and for 28 years had lived in a $7-a-month basement flat furnished with a bed with everything from old piano rolls to a rusty weather vane.

From employees of the Automat, the detective learned that the proprietor of his roll wax had popped the half-eaten bun into the oven.

MacVeigh's investigation uncovered an additional item. He found that, attending the hodge-podge in Lillian's room, he found under the mattress a number of old ticks may be expected to abound.

Immediate removal of the attached ticks is very essential to prevention of the disease. The ticks should be removed carefully and gently—without crushing—preferably with a small tweezers. If a tick is accidentally crushed, the area should immediately be washed off with soap and water, followed by the application of an antiseptic.

Campers, hunters and vacationists should closely examine their skins, periodically for the presence of attached ticks. Bedding should be inspected before being used before using. Clothing should be worn which prevents access to the skin by the tick. An application of grease has been suggested—to the wrist and ankles, in an effort to impede travel of the tick. In some areas the use of various tick-repellents—medicated ointments or solutions—has enjoyed a local reputation as preventatives, although their value is difficult to estimate. They are probably harmless at any rate.

The effective chloramphenicol recently developed antibiotic drugs, have both been effective in treatment of the disease. As these are new drugs, sufficient experience has perhaps not been yet obtained to indicate which is superior.

Loss of Eleven In Ship Collision And Tops Death Toll

(By The Canadian Press)

A ship sinking in which 11 persons perished topped Eastern Canada's list of 19 weekend fatalities. In another mishap 2 train men were killed when two trains collided.

Eleven of the 17-man crew of the trawler Gertrude de Costa went down with the vessel was rammed by the freighter Island Connector off Halifax harbor early Saturday. The dead included Capt. Solomon Kolckie of Lunenburg, N.S.

Thirteen of the weekend fatalities occurred in Nova Scotia and 4 in Ontario.

In another early Saturday mishap, Engineer A. T. Short and fireman C. R. Brannan were killed when two Canadian Pacific Railway freight trains collided at Ashton station near Ottawa.

Other accidents a boy died from injuries suffered while playing hockey, a man was run over by a train, a woman and two men were burned to death, a man was drowned and another boy died in a highway mishap.

The other Nova Scotia fatalities were Doug Dorrington, from fatal injuries in a hockey game at Truro and Allan MacAuley, 60, drowned at Rose Ferry when his truck plunged into the water.

Other Ontario deaths were: At one of a policeman or a train engineer. It's the aim habit that counts, leads us all to believe that we're like that thought I picked up somewhere: Make no small plans Lindy. Be sure you have not the magic to stir imagination! People who keep their chin up farthest and if they give their eyes a lift they will see the star that was reserved for heroic and useful. It's the high-flying bird that sees over the storm and has the strongest as well.

It may have been a book, a friend, a motto, or the published story of a great life, but whatever the medium, we should thank God for it, and pursue it with courage and confidence, led by example to be the means of awakening others.

The aim is the thing. "What's all the difference?" No one has ever achieved anything without it. Without aim we drift. And once entered upon, never desert it.

Police Officers Are Increased In Chinatown

New York, March 20 — (AP)— Police forces were increased in Chinatown Sunday night after a Brooklyn Chinese murder-suicide. The authorities refused to connect the two events.

However, a source at police headquarters said the increased force of police in the lower Manhattan area might indicate that the killing would endanger a truce between feud tongs in Chinatown.

"It's a little too quiet for a normal Sunday night," one official said of the Chinatown district "and there's a lot of new faces among the Chinese."

The Tong truce wars brought scores of killings during the 1920's and early 1930s, have been orderly since leaders of the rival Hip Sing and On Leong Tongs agreed on a truce.

Chapleau —Steve Dzigola, 27, bridegroom of one week, crushed to death; Sudbury — Gerry Mears, from injuries suffered when his bicycle collided with a truck; Kingston—Mrs. Peter McNeeley, 79, from burns suffered when clothing caught fire in her home last week; Toronto—Robert McKay, 84, killed by firemen to have set himself on fire while smoking a pipe in his home early Monday.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN SPOTTED FEVER GETS AROUND

One can acquire Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever without even being near the Rockies, just as one can acquire Malta Fever without going to Malta.

There are only two states in which this disease has not been observed — Maine and Vermont. However, it was first identified in the Rocky Mountain area and is still prevalent there.

The disease is caused by a bacteria-like microscopic organism of the order or 'rickettsia,' which is transmitted to man and animals by the bite of a variety of ticks. These ticks commonly attach themselves to rodents and larger animals.

The disease is ushered in as are most infectious diseases, by a chill, weakness, languor and fever followed within a few days by a wide-spread rash of "spotted" type. The illness may be very severe and fatalities have been numerous.

The degree of protection against the disease may be obtained by the use of vaccine. This does not prevent the acquisition of the disease always, those who have had the vaccine invariably recover with far less difficulty. Vaccination is recommended for anybody who contemplates living in the open country in the mountainous areas in view of the fact that the disease may be acquired in other areas. There is no reason for an objection to vaccination for anyone contemplating such travel. The bite of infected ticks may be expected to abound.

Immediate removal of the attached ticks is very essential to prevention of the disease. The ticks should be removed carefully and gently—without crushing—preferably with a small tweezers. If a tick is accidentally crushed, the area should immediately be washed off with soap and water, followed by the application of an antiseptic.

THAT AIM OF YOURS

We can accomplish little, or nothing in this life, without a definite aim. It is even far better to aim for something you wish to accomplish, and then aim to aim higher and get what you don't want!

There is an interesting personality in Hollywood whom we all know as Sam Goldwyn. Scores of stories are circulated in his name. He never said, much less ever dreamed of saying, that there is not an informant that he did say and here it is: "Never try to make a picture, unless you have a million of them trying to make A's!"

It took that German physician 605 tries before he gained the right formula for which he aimed. Edison made thousands of attempts before he achieved the one he sought. Without aim or purpose directly or upon, we merely flounder, getting nowhere.

Aims of childhood are to be encouraged, whether that aim be

Strength for the Day

DR. EARL L. DOUGLASS

PERHAPS A DAWNING

The world is astir today as it has not been in centuries. Unless every sign fails, we stand at the threshold either of the greatest horrors humanity has ever endured or its greatest blessings.

There are some of us who believe that the greatest days humanity has ever known lie ahead —and probably not very far ahead. A spiritual movement is beginning to stir the hearts of all people like the breeze which starts to stir when the dawn is near. The findings of science today are no longer destructive to religion. They appear to match up with the truths of revealed religion in most astonishing fashion. Anyone who has read "The Universe and Dr. Einstein" relishes this.

This is the time for people to read their Bibles with a new sense of expectancy, to pray with deeper faith than ever before, to be loyal to the church which is something great in the offing. It is going to do unlike anything we have ever known. It will happen in all its fullness when those who are living and dead, all at once, with a mighty host, and when their eagerness bursts forth into consuming fire.

This is not a day for pessimism; rather, it is a day for prayer and work for great triumphs.

THE PACKSACK

of GREGORY CLARK

Beginners seldom go to the beginning of their classes. This is the reflection of one of the best ski instructors in the business. It is true of a great many skills besides skiing.

Beginners, especially young ones, are reluctant to admit they are beginners. Thus in skiing as in almost every other activity, at every city, the great majority get off to a poor start. Several of the most enthusiastic skiers I know make it a point every season to take a few lessons to correct beginners' class to refresh their memories and instruct their muscles. Then all the hills are crowded with multitudes both young and adult who are under the fond impression that they are doing great, though it is obvious they do not know the elementary principles.

There is hardly anything in the world you can begin at, other than the beginning. But as high as fifty per cent of the human race believe nowadays that there are short-cuts, and that a person is a fool to begin at the beginning. The employment manager of a large corporation is afraid of nearly two hundred applications for jobs that he receives out of his new files. These were submitted by youths from 16 to 28 years of age. Upon every contact, it was obvious that they were all fresh from school, with little experience of work for wages. Yet in the column headed previous experience," not one boy or girl had filled in the word "none." They gave their employment history collection of meaningless or perhaps mythical jobs.

They did not know that the word "none" is the one an employment manager looks for in taking on young employees. What they want are the educational standards attained, plus evidence of character. All big businesses like to operate their own beginners' classes.

MARMORA Dramatic Club Presents Comedy 'Luck of the Irish'

Marmora — Marmora Town Hall was filled to capacity on Thursday evening for the presentation of a three-act comedy "The Luck of the Irish" by the Dramatic Club of Sacred Heart Church. The play was exceptionally well presented, and the members of the cast and the director, Mrs. J. Black, deserve a lot of credit for the fine presentation.

The staging of the lay, and the limitations of a thunder storm, as well as the singing of birds, were cleverly arranged and quite realistic. The clever acting of Rose Anne Meehan, 7-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Meehan, was the highlight of the play, and brought rounds of applause from the audience.

The cast of characters was as follows: Constance Harrington, Miss Vera O'Neill; Van Tassel MacMorrough, Don Shannon; Jiz; Dermot O'Toole, A. M. Jones; Barbara Harrington, Josephine Meehan; Madamoiselle, Mrs H. Brady, Hensi, William Meehan; Nora Mulvey, Miss Cecile Black; Ellen Augenblick, Mrs. P. Brawley; Janet Augenblick, Janet Black and Dennis Harrington, John Freeman.

The scene of the play take place at Derry's cottage on the Long Island estate of De Lancey Ington.

Sociables between the acts were: "A Rose Dream" in which the following took part: Patricia Chalmers, Peggy Hughes, Priscilla Black, Agnes Forestell, Audrey Black, Verna Meehan, Rose Anne Meehan, and Jackie Black; an Irish jig by Miss Audrey Black; and a duet by Miss Audrey Black and Peter Nicholson. Vocalist was Mrs. Hugh Brady, and accompanist, Mrs. James Black.

The play was repeated on Friday evening and was again well attended.

Marmora—Miss Edna McFaul of Belleville, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Harold Nobes and Mr. Nobes.

Mr. and Mrs. Manley Lavender are confined to bed with the flu.

Mr. Ronald McGarvey has returned to Galt after spending the weekend at his home here.

Mrs. Ronald McGarvey, and daughter, Sharon, have returned home from a visit with relatives in Belleville.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Osborne will celebrate their 46th wedding anniversary on Saturday, March 18th, at their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Agnew, of Peterborough, visited the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sopha, over the weekend.

Marmora Council, No. 379 Reliable Life Insurance Society, held its monthly meeting on Tuesday evening at the home of friends, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sopha. At the close of the business session, the hostess served refreshments.

Mrs. J. Reardon was admitted to the Home for the Aged in Belleville last week.

Miss Audrey Lemmis and Miss Audrey Phillips have obtained positions in Peterborough.

Disagreement Postpones Action On Consolidation of Park, Ball Park

Tweed, Special—A joint meeting of the Tweed Village Council and the parks board was held in the council chamber on Wednesday night to discuss the suggestion that Tweed Memorial Park be turned into a community centre and the ground used as it now exists be disbanded.

Mr. N. C. Graham explained the visit to Toronto by W. R. Hurst and Rob Wood, members of the Kinsmen Club where all provisions of the Community Centre Act were explained by officials of the Department of Agriculture. He went over various phases of the Act as they were given to the council at a recent meeting.

He explained that the ball park must be turned over to the council by the Kinsmen in order to qualify for the grants. The Kinsmen have prepared to turn the ball park over to the village council on the understanding that the Community Centre would be merged into a community centre, administered by a board under the supervision of the municipal council. Under the Act they will be entitled to a 25 per cent grant on all expenditures on improvements to the park and will be able to levy a rate.

The early history of the park, the financing and the creation of the committee was discussed and the minute books of 1929 and 1930 were examined.

Explains Viewpoint

Mr. W. J. Gordon, chairman of the park board since 1932, said he would resign if all the money he had helped raise to buy the park and keep over that period was repaid.

"Gentlemen, have you any much do you think that would amount to?"

Mr. Gordon, "I would have to figure that out."

"It seems peculiar that an individual had to donate funds to help the park," interjected Mr. Burkitt.

"Nobody else took much interest in the park," he watched the park grow from a swamp into what it is today and has the park over that period was repaid.

"Gentlemen, have you thousands of dollars into that park personally and I will resign now, if the council or the governments are disposed to pay me back my investment. I have tried to help in every way possible to create a nice park and when I retired from business I had hoped to devote my full time to building it up."

Mr. Burkitt asked, "Had you hoped to operate it as an individual?" Mr. Gordon replied "Oh I don't have to answer any more of your questions." Continuing he said, "I have put a lot of my own money into that park, and I don't feel like turning it over to newcomers who have put no work into it at all."

Several minor verbal clashes followed the new plan and some of those present almost left they were not altogether clear on all aspects of the Community Centre Act. At this point, Mr. Gordon said he was not inclined to discuss the matter at this time and left the meeting.

Wants Change Made Now

Reeve Graham said that possibly the Kinsmen Club could go on and complete the ball park, install the flood lights, and make other improvements for this year, so that the park would continue as an operating unit; then some agreement could be made.

Councillor Burkitt remarked, "I would say definitely 'No'. The time is ripe for a change now. The Kinsmen have offered to donate the park to the village after the flood lights, considerable money into it and I can see no logical reason for refusing it."

After much further discussion it was finally agreed that any definite decision in this regard would be deferred until the next meeting, which is on April 6th.

One of the youngest members of the Federal Government and cabinet minister, Hon. Robert Scotia since 1946, the Honorable Robert Henry Winters will be guest speaker for the local Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon on Tuesday noon.

Entering politics five years ago Mr. Winters served in several posts before he was named minister of Resources and Development, the post which he now holds. He is Federal member for Lunenburg-Queens on the south shore of Nova Scotia.

In 1947, after two years as a back bencher, Mr. Winters was made parliamentary assistant to Revenue Minister J. J. In 1948 he was named to assume direction over the Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

Ban on Export Of Game Fish Asked by Anglers

Toronto, March 20 — (CP) — The Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters urged Sunday that export of game fish, other than mounted specimens, be banned by the provincial government.

The suggestion was made in one of 23 resolutions passed by the 24 directors of the federation its effect would be to prevent non-resident anglers from taking fish home.

The federation said the proposal is favored by many resort owners. It is to go before the annual meeting of the fish and game committee of the Ontario legislature tomorrow.

Other resolutions asked for stricter regulation of aircraft using fishing and hunting, an amendment to the deer law to make it illegal for any hunter to shoot one deer regardless of sex or age, and a penalty of seven days in jail for persons found carrying firearms while intoxicated.

No Warning Given On Fuchs in 1946 By Canada-Attlee

London, March 20 (CP)—Prime Minister Attlee told the House the British government had not received any warning from the Canadian government in connection with the case of Dr. Klaus Fuchs at the time of the Canadian Royal Commission on espionage in 1946.

He was replying in the House of Commons to a question by Henry Strauss, Conservative member for Toronto South.

Fuchs, German-born British atomic scientist, admitted he was sentenced to 14 years imprisonment for betraying western atomic secrets to Russia.

There have been reports that United States authorities who first discovered that Fuchs was giving secrets to Russia, received the first tip from the notebook of a Soviet agent who was investigated in connection with the Canadian spy ring.

In Ottawa there have been unofficial reports that the name of Fuchs' name was in a notebook that came into the possession of the RCMP in their probe of the 1946 spy ring.

If the story however, was discovered only recently when it became known there was a delay in information leak in England and investigators began backchecking to obtain the source of information on spies including materials discovered in the Canadian probe.

It was then that the Fuchs name came to light, apparently in a notebook. There has been no indication from Ottawa that the RCMP gave British intelligence a tip on Fuchs in 1946.

Mercurys Coast To Third Win In Final Series

London, March 20 — (CP) — Canada's Edmonton Mercurys today coasted to an easy 11-1 victory in their third straight victory in the round-robin finals of the World Amateur Hockey tournament.

The Mercurys virtually clinched the game in the first two minutes of play when MacCauley and then left winger Billy Dawe breezed through Norway's non-existence defence and easily beat goalie Per Dahl.

Both Marsh Darling and defenceman Jack Davies scored twice. Other Canadian scorers were Jim Kilburn, Al Purvis, and Bob Watt.

phoned Provincial Constable Roy MacDonald and Coroner Dr. M. G. Graham at Dutton, 13 miles east of here.

Meanwhile, Sumegi had discarded the shotgun in favor of the rifle. Sabo said he saw Sumegi drive past his house to Rodney.

Sumegi parked in front of the town hall. For a few minutes nothing happened.

Then Constable MacDonald spotted Sumegi. Sumegi, apparently seeing the white-painted police cruiser, got out of the front seat, entered the rear of his car, sat in a corner, raised the rifle to his forehead and shot himself to death.

Friends of the Sumegis were quoted as saying Sumegi and the deceased "never got along." The Sumegis were married about 3 years ago. Her first husband was found dead on the New York Central Railroad tracks near here a short time before.

should be included in the bargaining unit. The Board decided that students and office boys should be excluded. But it decided to leave factors in excluding news editors, the No. 2 men in bureaux across the country.

Five-Four Split

Including chief office boys was decided on a 5-4 split of the board. Otherwise, no dissent was reported in the judgment.

On a fifth issue, the board declined to give effect to the contention of CP that its news-handling employees should not be subject to "external influences" that might arise from American control of the Guild and from Guild activities in the field of politics.

Guelph Named Agricultural Capital of the Province

Toronto, March 20. (CP)—The Ontario legislature's committee on conservation today put forward recommendations which would make Guelph the agricultural capital of the province.

In its report to the legislature, it proposed federation into one educational institution of three colleges now operating as separate entities at Guelph and transfer to that city from Toronto of all officials of the Department of Agriculture except those engaged in administration of legislation or in inspection.

The recommendations were aimed at co-ordinating all services rendered to farmers by the Department of Agriculture.

The Ontario Agricultural College and the Ontario Veterinary College at Guelph were qualified to become the base of headquarters for all conservation work in agriculture in Ontario. The committee proposed that they be merged, along with the Macdonald Institute of home economics, into one institution as a first step in preparing them to assume greater stature.

The federated school would be administered by a president and three deans—one in agriculture, one for veterinary science and one for home economics. It was also proposed a 12-member board of regents to study and make recommendations on matters of policy, administration and finance.

Regents would be selected from a panel submitted by five organizations: Ontario Federation of Agriculture, five members; O.A.C. Alumni three; O.V.C. Alumni, two; Macdonald Institute Alumni, one; Federated Women's Institutes of Ontario, one.

Should Move to Guelph

Although the report proposed that the director of Agricultural Extension and his staff move to Guelph, it suggested he remain directly responsible to the deputy minister of Agriculture in Toronto. It recommended that the extension director have supervision of all county officers of the department and that all extension work in counties or directly on farms be co-ordinated through the county offices.

Improved by the value of radio and films in carrying the conservation message, the report urged training in radio—and eventually television—for extension workers and wider use of films.

The report said that although experimental farms served a useful purpose, demonstration or model, it was regarded as experiment expense did not satisfactorily meet the need.

"What is needed is demonstrations of what the average farmer can do in the average farmer's circumstances, which of course are quite different from those of the experimental farm."

County Crop Improvement Associations could perform the right kind of demonstration and some had embarked on ambitious and constructive schemes.

Powassan is 27 miles south of North Bay.

Fish, Wildlife Wardens in Great Numbers Needed

Toronto, March 20 (CP) —Fish and wildlife, Ontario's oldest crop —is still an important one, the Ontario Legislature's Committee on Conservation said in a report tabled Monday.

Taken from only 10 per cent of the area of the province is cleared agricultural land, the report said that the remaining 90 per cent will produce fish and wildlife and 50 per cent—either water or muskeg, rock or inaccessible forest areas—will produce no other crop.

Conservation of wild life had two main objectives: 1. To give Ontario residents a chance to hunt and fish for fun or trap for profit; 2. See and enjoy wild life in all its forms.

The committee had received many submissions on wildlife and fish. But because of the broad nature of its terms of reference it felt that it could make recommendations to broad principles.

It urged that the Ontario Government provide for an increase in fundamental research leading to a knowledge of the critical factors controlling fish and wildlife populations.

Then, noting the vast areas to be patrolled in the remote parts of Northern Ontario, it suggested special training courses for guides at the Ontario Forest Ranger School in Haliburton. With guides aboard, who make their livelihood taking fishing and hunting parties into the bush, "would provide an efficient auxiliary type of game warden and overseer."

Free-Gold Market Prices Slump

London, March 20 (CP)—The free-market price of gold has slumped. The market has been flooded in recent weeks with offerings from Hong Kong, Macao, Beyrouth, Tangier, Amsterdam and Paris.

Gold traders in China are reported to have lost heavily when the Nationalist Government turned heavy seller. With the communist regime out of the market, the price of gold coins and small bars dropped to $39 an ounce in Hong Kong the lowest quotation since the war.

In Paris, free gold dropped to $42.50 an ounce against $45.50 a month ago. (The U.S. controlled market buying price is $35 an ounce.)

As prices slumped, turnover increased. Total trading in free gold in January is estimated at $80,000,000 25 percent above January dealings.

Financial quarters say the slump has developed because the supply of free gold now is about equal to the effective demand for hoarding purposes.

Speaker Warns Against Too Much Worldly Pleasures

Speaking to the Christ Ambassadors young people's group at Grace Chapel on Friday night, the Reverend Hope Smith appealed for a deeper spiritual walk and cautioned his hearers against following the lusts and pleasures of the world, which marked the carnally-minded Christian.

Referring to St. Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians, the speaker stated "the carnal man is an earthly minded Christian. He does not grow in the Lord because he sets his affections on the things of the world and does not yield completely to the Lord.

"There are people today who refuse to know the Lord but when any crisis comes up they are just the same as the next man.

Fail To Understand

"Then there is the natural man, who receives not the spiritual things of God, for they are foolishness to him. We have many people today in this category. They are cultured, educated, even moral, but they are unsaved and do not understand spiritual things.

"These people ridicule us for being Christian; they do not understand what they want to go to church. When it comes to the things of God they do not realize that spiritual things are discerned only by those who seek the spirit of God.

"Men cannot please God in the natural state," asserted the speaker. "We have some lovely benevolent organizations, and they have their place, but a lot of people think they are serving God by being active in these organizations.

"The natural man likes to shake the preacher's hand and never his name on a card. This is an easy thing to do, but he cannot understand humbling himself before God and repenting of his sins.

Seeks Christ

"But the spiritual man is grounded solidly on the word of God. He sees the guilt of people in his life and does his best to obey the commandments of Christ. The spiritual man does not offend others and he has love in his heart for everybody."

Supplying his own accompaniment on the piano-accordian, Mr. Smith sang "God Leads us Along."

Mr. John Holcroft, who was re-elected president for the ensuing year, was in charge of the meeting. Other officers elected were George Purvis, vice-president and Alan Haw secretary.

MARIO ... in this distinctive feature about Food ... What's Cooking?

By the author of "THE FACE IN THE ASPIC"

"As easy as pie" is a phrase only appreciated by pie eaters. Pie bakers feel differently on the subject. No housewife who has ever made a cream pie from scratch would call the job a push-over.

This accounts for the endless assortment of quick mix preparations which housewives are using more and more for baking.

In making a cream pie you can now use easy-make preparations from the bottom to the top. You can have your choice of a large variety of mixes for pie dough which even totally inexperienced cooks find easy to handle. For your pie filling you can empty into a saucepan any of the prepared pudding mixes which merely require adding milk and cooking until thick. You can even omit the whipped cream on the pie by merely squeezing the top of a can of whipped cream mix.

While all these simple twists of the wrist make things nice for the pie baker, pie eaters sometimes register a dissenting opinion.

Most of the pie dough mixes have a tendency to homey flavor. Pudding mixes for pie filling are smooth but have a slightly synthetic flavor if you're finicky. The whipped cream mixes produce billowy clouds of what looks like whipped cream but the flavor is not where near that of heavy sweet cream whipped to order.

If you are in a hurry, prepared vanilla pudding should be substituted for the vanilla filling in the following recipe.

Graded Chocolate Pie

Bake a 9-inch pie shell using any standard recipe or use a prepared pie dough mix.

In the top part of a double boiler combine 1-2 cup sugar, 1-8 teaspoon salt and 5 tablespoons flour. Mix well. Gradually add 2 1-2 cups of cold milk, stirring until mixture is smooth.

Place over bottom part of double boiler and cook over simmering water until thick, about 15 minutes, stirring frequently. Cover with lid and cook 10 minutes longer.

Beat 3 egg yolks slightly. Add part of hot mixture to egg yolks, and then add egg yolks to double boiler. Cook 2 minutes longer, stirring constantly. Remove mixture from double boiler. Add 1 tablespoon butter or margarine and 1 teaspoon vanilla extract.

Cool until mixture reaches room temperature. Pour into pie shell. Chill in refrigerator. When pie is completely cold, beat 1-2 cup heavy cream until thick, add 1 tablespoon sugar. Spread over pie filling. Sprinkle with 3 tablespoons grated sweet solid chocolate.

Use leftover egg whites for white layer cake.

During the study club period, Mrs. Lally explained in detail the method of preparing a room for a "sick call." Mrs. Hudon thanked Mrs. Lally for her instructive demonstration.

A luncheon will be served by C.W.L. near the end of the month to the people of Batawa who will be present at St. Michael's for the 40 hours devotion.

The rules regarding the nominations of officers were outlined by Mrs. Sheet, as chairman, with Mrs. M. Kennedy, Albert Street, and Mrs. M. Hudon, Victoria Ave. All nomination slips must be signed and can be sent to any of the three named on committee, before the next meeting in April. A list of all C.W.L. members will be posted in the rear of the church.

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Her mother rules her dates

Dear Miss Fairfax:
I am 20 years old and in love. My trouble is that my mother refuses to admit that I am capable of looking after myself. Sometimes when the young man I go out with is at the house, she will come in and tell him some of my faults and take up a lot of our time talking to him. She refuses to let me go out very often at night or to stay out later than 11 o'clock.

Although Harry doesn't say anything, I don't think he likes it at all. What can I do, for I don't want to lose him?

S. L.

Dear S. L.:
I don't see why Harry should like to have your mother come in when he is calling on you, and monopolize the conversation. He would be a very unusual young man if he enjoyed such a thing.

Has he tried talking to one to ask your mother if you might go out with him in the evening? Perhaps if he made a point of speaking to her when he wants to invite you out, it might please her so much that she would be more inclined to give the permission. A tactful and gracious young man who shows pleasing deference toward older people can often work wonders in winning over a mother of this type. Since he is well aware of what the situation is, it would be perfectly all right for you to talk it over with him, in a light, casual fashion, and drop a hint that you try a little diplomacy on your mother.

A wedding that ought to be postponed

Dear Miss Fairfax:
I am engaged to be married next month. Our engagement was announced in the paper and all the arrangements for the wedding have been made.

My fiance tells me he loves me deeply and yet he takes another girl out. When I asked him about her he just said he didn't like her and that was all.

Now I don't know what to do, as I still love him very much and am afraid of losing him. Do you think he still loves me and is just doing this to make me jealous? I can't think of anything I have done to make him stop loving me.

C. J.

Dear C. J.:
Any man who would try and make the girl he professes to love jealous on the eve of their wedding, is a very mean and petty character. Moreover, I am afraid he is also a fickle one, when he takes some other girl out at such a time.

It would be a very hard experience for you to postpone your wedding after all arrangements have been made, but it might save you an even worse headache later on if you were to do this now. You wouldn't be the first girl to have done it, either.

If I were in your place, I would certainly prefer to wait awhile longer before taking as a husband a man who shows himself already inconsiderate and so careless of your feelings.

New Hearing Device Has No Receiver In Ear

Chicago, Ill.—Deafened people are hailing a new device that gives them clear hearing without making them wear a receiver button in the ear. They now enjoy songs, sermons, friendly companionship and business success with no self-conscious feeling that people are looking at any button hanging on their ear. With the new almost invisible Phantomold and Beltone you may frow yourself over this form of deafness, but from even the appearance of deafness. The makers of Beltone, Dept. 4D, 1450 W. 19th St, Chicago 8, Ill., are so proud of their achievement they will gladly send you their free brochure (in plain wrapper) and explain how you can test this amazing device in the privacy of your own home. Write today, using a penny. Write Beltone today.

For the career girl

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

THERE is no need to hew to the fashion line this season, with so many varied clothes, ideas, designs and accessories from which to choose, and all of them attractive and wearable. The only thing is to make the right selection for one's way of living. A good choice for the career or college girl might be this outfit. The sleeveless plaid wool jacket has a one-sided closing. The belt, which buckles in back, is cut in one with the front, draping softly over the midriff. A navy wool skirt has unpressed pleats all around. The blouse is of white linene faille.

GOOD MANNERS

Wedding Anniversary Plans

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:
My husband and I are celebrating our silver Wedding anniversary soon, and we are planning to give a small dinner party in a local tea-room. (1) Would it be proper for my husband and me to welcome the guests at the door? (2) The tables will be set in the shape of the letter T. There will be present two couples who were at our wedding. Would it be proper to have one of these gentlemen propose the toast? If so, when should this be done? And who replies to it? (3) If any of the guests bring gifts, should these be opened at once and the giver thanked then, or should they be put aside and opened later?

E.

(1) If you live near the tea room, it would be nice to have your guests assemble at your house and then proceed to the party. If this isn't possible, inquire if there is some small room in connection with the tea-room you can designate as the meeting-place. If there isn't, ask to have your guests directed to the table. Any of these plans would be better than having you and your husband stand at the door to greet your guests. (2) At the head table with you and your husband . . . you and he sit next to each other, you, the "bride", at the right of your "bridegroom" . . . have the two couples who were present at your wedding. Ask one of the men to propose the first toast . . . "To the bride and groom, and to their happiness now and always". This toast may be proposed at any time after the soft-drinkable" has been poured . . . and your husband responds to it, expressing thanks for both. (3) I believe that, generally speaking, all gifts, whenever possible and even if not too convenient, should be thanked for when they are presented. This does register enthusiasm and appreciation . . . whereas if gifts are put aside and not opened at once it gives the impression of dimmed, or least not-alert enthusiasm. However, this does depend on circumstances . . . for example, if you are taking your guests back to your house after the dinner, you might save the gift-opening for this more leisurely time.

Initials at end of business letter

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:
I would like your answer to this question which has always puzzled me. At the end of a business letter, to the left of where the signature is to be written, there are always type-written initials such as AAC/CC. I know that the first group of initials are the initials if the writer, the one who dictates the letter. But what do the other initials stand for, or rather, what should they stand for? I realize that CC stands for "Carbon Copy", but what always puzzles me is what other letters appearing in this position stand for.

B. A.

The first group of initials stand for the initials of the one who dictated the letter, as you say. The initials following, after the line, are the initials of the one to whom the letter was dictated, who typed the letter . . . very often today these initials are typed in lower case (small letters). I have never heard that CC means "Carbon Copy", but perhaps it sometimes does! Ordinarily the initials CC would stand for example, for Corinne Carter.

Attractive Spring footwear

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

HERE are some fresh footprints recorded along the road to Spring. Copied from an English boot is this sport shoe in navy calf with red piping. The heel is very new and interesting, for it has a wedge concealed inside. A navy calf heel and vamp trim are details of a neat beige suede sling-back pump. A looped tab tilts through the slot. The third shoe is that versatile shell of a pump that goes with almost anything. This one is in black suede with a modified heel.

BURR'S W.A.

Burr's—The March W.A. met at the home of Mrs. Floyd Huffman on Thursday afternoon. A good attendance was out despite the cold blustery day. The meeting was opened by the president, Mrs. C. Hough with the devotional period with Mrs. Percy Chase and Mrs. Don Parks assisting.

Business on hand included completing plans for the birthday tea, a silver collection of over $11 was taken for the "March of Dimes"; $10 was voted for the new X-ray equipment at Picton hospital; $10 was forwarded the flower treasurer; membership dues were paid. The society received birthday greetings from Mrs. Harry Spencer, Foxboro, and Mrs. Rosa Anderson, Cannifton. Mrs. C. Hough thanked members for a plant sent her during her recent illness. A contest from Mrs. Don Osterhout and a reading by Mrs. Tom Morden comprised the program with Mrs. George Harris receiving the contest favor.

Visitors present were Mrs. J Ash, Crofton; Mrs. Geo. Harris, Mrs. G. B. Harris, Mrs. Andrew Harris, 2nd Ameliasburg; Mrs Wm. Diggins, Mrs. Clarence Vincent and Miss C. Tait. Mrs. Doug lar Harns invited the April W.A. to her home.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMIESON

Tinting the eyelids

Today we will tell you a true story, just for fun. A pretty girl went to a party. She had a new man and a new frock and a fairly new hair-do and was tremendously pleased with her appearance. But the belle of the evening was a cute trick whose eyes were made big and startling by the use of shadows that imparted a come-hither look and an air of mystery.

The heroine of this story got pretty excited. If a bit of pigment on the eyelids could turn a girl into a siren, around whom the fellows seemed to gather in packs, she was all for it.

Next morning she was the first customer at the nearby drugstore, yelling her head off for eye shadows. She bought several, dashed home, sneaked into her own room and experimented.

The results were devastating. She applied purple and looked as if somebody had given her a couple of shiners—if you know what we mean. With the deep blue she looked as if she were about to expire. She feared that if she appeared before her family, the members would arise as one individual and slay her. So she sat down and had a good cry. Don't try to go it alone. Not with shadows. They're tricky.

A little coloring on the lids will make the feminine portrait a bit more vivid, often more interesting. The only feminine is likely to slip up by using too much, which can happen with powder, rouge and lipstick. Unless make-up causes a woman to look younger and lovelier, it does not fulfill the purpose for which it was created. An excess will invariably make the face look hard and brittle.

It is important to find the most becoming color. One will have the choice of blue, which is a favorite—of brown, bronze, grey, green, mauve, Green is the beauty ticket for the redhead, who usually has a delicate, fair, transparent skin. Mauve is lovely on the white-haired woman whose complexion has retained youthful freshness. Light blue is safe for the blonde; the brunette can carry a slightly darker tone.

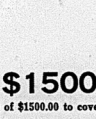
Few people can kill it singlehanded!

THIS IS THE PUT-OFF BIRD.

He usually appears just when you're deciding to do something that should be done without delay. Then he tries to talk you out of it.

When you're planning a trip, he'll tell you not to bother making reservations. Or when you have a slight toothache, he'll say: "Don't worry, pal—it'll soon go away. Besides, you're too busy to go to the dentist today!"



Oh, he's a sly one, this Put-Off Bird! And such a trouble-maker that he even tries to get fathers to neglect their family's financial security. But fortunately a deadly enemy of this bird often appears at such critical moments — and saves the day.

This enemy of the bird — and friend of fathers — is the life insurance representative. Aiming a few realistic facts at the mischievous creature, he kills it deader than the cousin, the Dodo. Its dangerous propaganda is silenced. And always the father then realizes why he should act to protect his family immediately.

Thus the life insurance representative helps prevent countless people from having to depend on charity or relatives for their support in years to come.

Life underwriters help people in other ways, too. They are trained to analyse all the facts related to the family's future needs . . . then build a sound life insurance plan that meets those needs exactly.

More than a million Canadian families have benefited by the services of the modern life underwriter. And he's always glad to help you!

A helpful citizen in your community

When a life insurance representative sells you a policy, he also helps to improve your community. For a large part of each life insurance dollar is put to work through investments to build schools, bridges, highways, industrial plants and many other projects that create jobs and make for better living. BULLETINS FROM BIRDLAND

WINIFRED E. WILSON

OUR DUCKS

With its three-sided coast line and extensive waterways, Canada is an excellent breeding ground for ducks. We have all kinds: river and pond, diving and sea, and fish ducks. Unlike song birds, Mallards and Black ducks went through the performance of courtship and mating in their winter quarters as long ago as January, and by now many species have paired and are on their way back to Canada. It was because of this early pairing and readiness to settle down to housekeeping on reaching their destination that spring duck shooting was prohibited by law in both the United States and our own country some years ago.

Most of our ducks wintered in a fairly restricted area of the southern states, and will breed in a belt that stretches across central Canada. They travel by four main flyways. Pintails, Baldpates, and others heading for the west coast use the Pacific path. Northwestern ducks and many bound for the prairies take what is known as the central flyway, which brings a few from Central America or even farther south. In eastern Mexico and Texas they are joined by others, and proceed almost due north. On reaching our southern border the flyway extends from the Rockies to Manitoba. The route used extensively by the majority of our Mallards, Pintails, Ring-necked and prairie-bred ducks is called the Mississippi flyway because it follows the great valley of the Mississippi River. It then fans out to Alaska on the west and Baffin Land on the east. These last two flyways include all our northern lake district. The Atlantic coast is travelled by Black and many prairie ducks, as Redhead, Scaup, Teal, and Scoter.

In late March, April, and early May great numbers of Ducks, ranging in size from the little green-winged Teal of 14½ inches to the 30 inch Black, are overhead at night and spend the hours of daylight in favorable locations resting and feeding. Some diving ducks that submerge when in danger occasionally journey over water by day and over land at night.

Largely due to government restrictions, bird sanctuaries, and the efforts of the organization called Ducks Unlimited there seems to be a slight increase in duck population. If this is to be maintained, the public must be educated in conservation. Water pollution by oil is a modern danger to our waterfowl against which we must guard.

British Artist Buries Hatchet

London — (CP) — Fifteen years ago artist Stanley Spencer, now 57, told the Royal Academy: "I will take care you never have another picture of mine."

He resigned from the academy, high temple of British art, because two of his controversial modernistic paintings, "Lovers," and "St. Francis and the Birds," were rejected by the hanging committee.

Wounds healed by the years. Spencer has just been re-elected an associate of the academy. His works have been best-sellers Toronto and Vancouver are among cities whose galleries have acquired one or more of Spencer's pictures.

"Psychic" Phone Brings Protest

London — (CP) — A British telephone subscriber protested the inclusion on his bill of a charge for a call he said began with a wrong number. But the General Post Office said the telephone must have been psychic and given him the number he really wanted, even if it wasn't the one he dialled.

The person answered the subscriber's "wrong" number turned out to be a friend and a conversation ensued. As Britons are charged by the call the subscriber did not want it to count on his bill.

But, said the G.P.O., "this seems to have been a time-saving piece of thought-reading by the machine. The caller was able to make use of the wrong number obtained and a conversation was completed. It was, therefore, an effective connection and no claim for credit for a wrong number would be admissible."

BCI Basketball Seniors Win First COSSA Title in 18 Years: Juniors, Girls Drop Close Tilts

By DON ROSE

"Where is B.C.I. & V.S."? was a familiar question in Belleville Saturday during C.O.S.S.A. playdowns. "Belleville" was the answer and everyone knew it as the under-rated BCIVS seniors defeated the highly-rated Niagara Falls Perfectos 42-38 and came through with a smashing victory over Peterborough 45-30 to become the Central Ontario champs for the first time in 18 years.

B.C.I. & V.S. Juniors in their best form were defeated by a bigger and faster Niagara Falls team 50-22.

The Belleville boys made a grand showing and made tough competition for the Niagara squad. Soules, 3 and Batchelor with 5 points were top swingers while Trizzo 15, Blew 15 and McKenzie with 9 points were Niagara Falsers.

Belleville — Barclay; Batchelor 5, Cameron, 4, Soules, Dill 3, Hagerman, Harback, Kane, McBrien, Matthews, Page, Soules, 8. Niagara Falls — Trizzo, 15, Campaigne, Sheppard, Logan, 2, House, 4, Blew, 15, Divarnyik, Fisher, Tanuram, McKenzie, 9.

Seniors 45—Niagara 36

Before 500 cheering Niagara Falls fans the B.C.I.V.S. Senior "Farmers" defeated the top-notch Niagara Falls Senior. Niagara Falls fans saw their team taken off by a squad of strong spiritual Belleville boys who made the biggest set-back of the playdown. At half-time B.C.I. led by 14 and clinched it with the final count 42-36. The city boys showered in the tears of Niagara fans

Faulkner, 11, and Ketcheson, 9, were top hoopers for Belleville as Kip Summers came through with a complete game of real checking and playing.

BCI Senior 45—Peterborough 30

Peterborough was next to be overwhelmed by Belleville squad as "Bev" Goulding who classed his boys as tops had to admit for the first time in many years, defeat by Red Townsend's classy squad 45-30. Accused Mercy Slayer to be Assisted by Town

Allentown, Pa., March 20—(AP)—The plight of Harold Mohr, accused mercy slayer, today caught the imagination of the 3,100 residents of nearby Coplay.

"Almost to a man, we're behind Harold," said August Hobel, Jr., Coplay coal dealer and leader of the movement to back the 36-year-old ex-tannery worker with both money and heart.

"I make coal deliveries and people stop me every 20 feet to ask 'when are you going to come around and collect from me to help Harold?'" Hobel said.

"The folks in these parts just believe that Harold did what he thought was right," Hobel added.

Mohr is being held on a charge of murder in the shotgun slaying of his blind, cancer-ridden brother, Walter, 55. The victim had been blind for 15 years. His face had wasted away until only his jips could be seen.

Tonight, the citizens of Coplay are holding a meeting in the town hall. They will lay a campaign to help Mohr in every way they can.

Tarzan's Creator Dies Aged 74, Made Millions

Encino, Calif., March 20—(AP)—Edgar Rice Burroughs, whose own twist of the theory of evolution—Tarzan—brought riches that Darwin never dreamed of, is dead.

Burroughs died Sunday, but the ape-man he created in 1912 will live on to delight other generations of youngsters the world over.

Fifteen novels were awaiting publication when Burroughs died in bed of a heart attack. A movie producer said he had contracted to make 15 more Tarzan films.

The 74-year-old multi-millionaire writer became ill three months ago but up to that time had kept turning out new stories about his jungle hero.

"Tarzan of the Apes" brought Burroughs only $700. After its phenomenal success, he retained control over his literary works and the royalties reached fabulous proportions. From movie rights alone he reported to have realized $5,000,000.

Almost 40,000,000 Tarzan books have been sold. Some have been translated into as many as 56 languages. The ape-man, portrayed by such actors as Johnny Weissmuller, Buster Crabbe and currently Lex Barker, has appeared in 27 movies.

Burroughs never set foot in Africa, the locale of his jungle stories. He used to recall with delight, however, that world travellers frequently complimented him on the authenticity of his settings.

Burroughs and the former Emma Hulbert, whom he had married in 1900, were divorced in 1934. A year later he married Florence Dearholt. That marriage ended in divorce in 1941. He had three children.

Gubitchev Placed On Ship Bound For Russia

New York, March 20—(AP)—Valentine A. Gubitchev sails home to Soviet Russia today, freed from serving 15 years in an American prison as a spy.

Then Gubitchev will be placed on the Ogden-Ameriea liner Batory, bound for Gdynia, Poland.

Gubitchev, under federal government orders "never to return" to the United States, will be accompanied by his wife.

The suspended United Nations engineer will be taken in a prison van from jail to court, and then to the ship. He will be kept under guard in his stateroom until border patrol officers leave the Batory at Ambrose lightship off New York harbor.

The United Nations will pay Gubitchev's fare home, because he was a U.N. employee before his arrest here a year ago with Judith Coplon.

Miss Coplon, 28-year-old former department of justice employee who was convicted with Gubitchev on spy conspiracy charges, also drew a 15-year prison sentence.

The 33-year-old Russian accepted a government offer to suspend the prison sentence on condition he drop his appeal and return to Russia.

Babe Zaharias Best in Tourney With 298 Score

(By The Canadian Press)

The great Babe Didrickson Zaharias, wearing her "killer clothes," Sunday killed off any ideas that she is finished with championship golf. She won the Women's Titleholders Tournament with a record-breaking 298 strokes.

Her final round in the 72-hole tournament was done in 75 and followed others of 72, 78 and 73.

Besides setting a record, the Babe won her second Titleholders' title. She was the victor in 1947 with 303 strokes, which stood as a record until Peggy Kirk of Findlay, Ohio, won on 299 last year.

At Hollywood, Fla., Phil Marchildon, Philadelphia Athletics' hurler from Penetanguishene who is trying to make a comeback, gave up three runs in the first inning Sunday as the A's bowed 7-4 to Baltimore Orioles of the International League in an exhibition baseball game.

Marchildon, out most of the last season with a sore arm, was the starting pitcher. After the 3-run splurge he held the Orioles hitless until relieved in the 6th.

The Canadian Press Toronto Bureau's hockey team Saturday defeated the Montreal Bureau 3-1. The Toronto victory broke Montreal's 14-year stranglehold on the "K. J. challenge trophy," donated in 1936 by E. S. Johnson, now chief of the CP's London Bureau, for the annual inter-office match.

A hard driving basketball team from the Tri-Bell Athletic Club of Toronto won the Senior Men's Ontario Basketball Crown at London Saturday when they downed Windsor Sterlings 65-57 in the third game of their best-of-three series.

Wisconsin's Don Gehrmann soundly drubbed Fred Wilt in the Bankers' Mile at Soldier Field Saturday night, Gehrmann unleashed a sizzling stretch drive, pacing Wilt on the final turn, to win by 10 yards in 4:09.3.

At Ste. Marguerite, Que., a Canadian girls' team defeated United States contestants to win the annual women's international ski-team races at nearby Mount Baldy during the weekend. The Canadians' combined time for the slalom and downhill events was two minutes and 40 9/10 seconds better than the U. S. team.

At Lincoln, England, Gordon Richards Saturday got a good start in his bid to remain Britain's top jockey for another year by steering more heavily-backed Dreamzie in the one-mile Lincolnshire Handicap, first of the big British flat races.

THREE-GOAL EFFORT

Montreal, March 20—(CP)—A three-goal effort by Jimmy Plancha gave Sherbrooke Saints a 4-0 shutout over Montreal Royals Sunday in the deciding game of a best-of-seven Quebec senior Hockey League semi-final series. Sherbrooke took the round four games to two.

A capacity crowd of 12,000 saw the Saints outplay the Montrealers in a bruising contest, often marked by brief fights among the players.

Sherbrooke now advances into the final best-of-seven series against Quebec Aces. The opening game is scheduled for next Tuesday at Quebec.

Training Camp Briefs

The Yankee clipper sat out his second straight game Sunday as the Boston Red Sox won their second of three exhibition games with the New Yorkers, 10-7. Dimaggio picked up a charley horse against the Dodgers Friday.

Gregg turned in a sparkling performance while the Bucs were beating Chicago Cubs 7-2 in Los Angeles Sunday. He worked 5 2-3 innings, giving up only four hits walking three and fanning five.

St. Petersburg, Fla.— Howard Pollet, who was a long time in coming to contract terms with St. Louis Cardinals, made his first start in a game Sunday against Cincinnati. He was touched for the only Cincinnati runs. The Cards won 4-2.

Red Munger, also making his first start for the Cardinals, retired nine of the 10 men he faced. Ken Johnson gave up four hits in his four-inning stint.

Fullerton, Calif.—If it's any consolation to Cleveland's Indians pitcher Bob Lemon looked wonderful Sunday. He hurled hitless ball for five innings and give up only two hits in the Indians' last 5-0 to San Francisco Seals. His teammates committed eight errors, handing the Seals four unearned runs as a gift.

So Lemon, who yielded two runs on his teammates' errors, got charged with the loss.

Lakeland, Fla.—Detroit Tigers dug in today for their severest test of the spring training campaign — successive games with New York Yankees and Boston Red Sox.

They tuned up Sunday for the invasion of the American Leagues big guns by beating Washington's Senators 4-1 behind the fine pitching of Virgil Trucks and Art Houteman.

Mercurys Well On Way to Bring Title to Canada

By MICHAEL O'MARA
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 20 — (CP) — Edmonton Mercurys are well on the road to recovering the world hockey title fo Canada — but manager Jimmy (the Leader) Graham shudders reflectively every time he thinks how "close" a call the Merkr had Saturday night against the United States.

The 5-0 whitewashing goalie Wilbur Delaney and his fellow mates handed the Americans seemed an easy victory on the scoresheet. But not until the dying minutes was the game on ice. Meantime, the Canadian supporters did everything but set up a commanding lead.

The Canadians had three-quarters of the territorial play, but for 47 minutes their shooting was wide, wild and woolly.

Bob Watt of the Mercurys scored late in the first period when the puck slid in off the pads of desperate Dick Desmond of Hanover, N.H., who held down the American net - minding chores.

After that the puck just wouldn't go in. Meantime, the Americans had enough chances to make things interesting. Rush after rush broke on the staunch U. S. defence. But the Canadians kept up such a steady pressure that they must have had at least 10 sure-fire scoring chances during the second period and the early part of the third.

Goalie Desmond foiled a few of these but most of them failed through over-eager shooting at close range.

Three Clinch Game

But the Mercurys' relentless attack clinched finally when Don Young and Leo Lucchini worked a rapid three-way passing play with Al Newsome and Newsome finally beat Desmond at 7:15 of the period. After that Newsome, Harry Allen and Lucchini poked three more into the netting to clinch the game.

The Mercurys' game today in Empress Hall at Earl's Court, figures to be simpler proposition altogether.

Canada takes on Norway, one of the two clubs in the final championship round-robin which hasn't yet won a game. The other winless wonders are the Swedes, the only code unbeaten into the final round.

The surprise team so far is the British crew — mostly Scots lads — which have beaten Norway and Sweden, each by a goal late in the game.

Britain now is in second place behind the Mercurys. Each has four points but the Canadians are ahead on the goal-average.

The United States and Switzerland each has won one and lost one.

Canada meets Britain Tuesday and winds up against Sweden Wednesday.

Manager Graham has arranged two post-tournament exhibitions before the Mercurys head home. The Canadians will play a return match against Earl's Court Rangers Friday and pay a third visit to Streatham the following Monday.

They then travel to Liverpool and sail on the Empress of France March 29, taking off by plane for Edmonton immediately on docking.

I guess we do depend on Nickel...
Exhaust manifolds and other parts of radial engines have to stand up under the corroding action of hot exhaust gases. Nickel alloys do this job too.
The jet engine has developed only as new Nickel alloys were proven able to stand up under the terrific temperatures and strains essential to jet operations.
Aeroplane parts must have dependable strength and minimum weight. That's why Nickel alloys are used. In the engine, landing gear and all through the ship Nickel alloys are found. And in the galley, the hostess prepares the food on surfaces made of bright, sanitary Nickel alloys.
Forty-three years of research have uncovered hundreds of uses for Nickel in the United States and other countries. Now Nickel exports bring in millions of U.S. dollars yearly. These dollars help pay the wages of the 14,000 Nickel employees in Canada and also help pay Canadian railwaymen, lumbermen, iron and steel workers and other men and women making supplies for the Nickel mines, smelters and refineries.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

You hear me boast and boast about the accuracy of a safe and sane trick count. Particularly the count in my Horse Sense system, than which there is no better or surer.

But the count of enough tricks does not always assure the safety or every contract. Several things can upset the calculations. One troublesome foe of a good trick count is duplication of values.

Each high card or short card is counted as one trick. In a pair, each card may have a short in the same suit. Although two tricks were counted for the shorts only one round can be ruffed.

This duplication is seldom discovered during the bidding. It pops up after the contracting ends. Try to anticipate when it will occur and avoid deals with underbid. So, it must be tolerated.

There are compensations to offset such duplication. Instead of taking the tricks counted in the short suit, a long card in another suit may develop. Or clever play may overcome it.

Another foe to a good trick count is unusual division in hands of opponents. This may be discovered in time with a long neck. But no neck is long enough to see duplications in partner.

Step into this deal:

NORTH
♠K Q 7 3 2
♥Q 6
♦J 5 4
♣A 8 4

WEST
♠9 6 5
♥A K J 9
♦Q 9 7 6

EAST
♠10
♥8 7 4 3 2
♣Q J 10 7 3

SOUTH
♠A J 8 4
♦A K 3 2
♣K 6 2

South has a count of five: four high cards and a short heart. North counts five; four highs and a short heart. Neither knows his short is duplicated in partner. They should be in four spades.

Due to this duplication of values in hearts, there seems to be a total of four losers. West has two hearts and a diamond. East has a trick in the third round of clubs. Or so it looks.

West will first take king and ace of hearts. Then he will lead a club or trump. If you are south you must decide how to keep from losing two more tricks. Go gettem.

Hollywood, March 20 (AP) — Remember the song that goes "I Wanna Get Married"? Lizabeth Scott is singing it.

The Hollywood bachelor girl used to be a standard fixture in Hollywood. Then such gals as Olivia DeHavilland, Rosalind Russell, Jeanne Crain, Anne Baxter and Joan Leslie got married. Even Elizabeth Taylor is deserting the unmarried ranks. That leaves Miss Scott, Margaret O'Brien and only a few others among the stars who haven't trod down the well-known aisle.

"I miss having someone to come home to," Miss Scott sighed. "I'm quite loquacious. I like to talk about what has happened to me during the day. The only one I have to talk to is my maid.

"Besides, I would like to listen to someone else expound on his day. In other words, I'd like to have someone to share my life, and I'd like to share someone's life."

AT THE BELLE
"SAMSON AND DELILAH"

Producer Cecil B. DeMille, who divided the Red Sea in "The Ten Commandments", staged the monumental siege in "The Crusades" and used more than 6,000 extras for the Roman arena scenes in "The Sign of the Cross" retards these epic feats at child's play since making his latest Technicolor spectacle, "Samson and Delilah" starring Hedy Lamarr and Victor Mature which opens today at the Belle Theatre; continuing on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, matinee daily.

For this Paramount production of the Old Testament love story, which stars Victor Mature and Hedy Lamarr in the title roles, DeMille conceived and executed the most ambitious scene he has ever attempted in 30 years in movie-making.

It was the destruction of the Temple at Gaza by the blind and wrathful Samson. Nothing like this scene had ever been staged before and, inasmuch as it is the climax of "Samson and Delilah", DeMille was determined to make it something that would shock the customers out of their seats.

A section of the temple, fashioned after modern evidence of the pre-Christian era, occupied two Paramount sound stages. Nos. 14 and 15—some of the very few times a set has required the space of more than a single stage. Huge pillars ranged around two walls of the stages, with a portion of the Philistine god, Dagon (The original Dagon towered 60 feet) reproduced for this monstrous episode.

It took eight days to film the destruction of the Temple—and more than five months to build it. Approximately 1,000 Philistine spectators, slaves, liveried supernumeraries, high priests, and ceremonial dancers were on hand for Samson's crushing revenge on the people who had enslaved him. While a record total of 51,000 amperes of brilliant light poured down upon the scene, the huge propellers and sound machines, like cables started demolishing sent up a great dust and thunder. the Temple as five camera re- workmen suspended from invis- corded the event.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was thinking to herself with a absent minded expression saying to pop, No matter how I try to forget it, William, the sad fact remains. We owe the Bizzlies a dinner invitation, she said.

By gollies so we do, pop said. We had dinner there, and accordling to the law of the jungle they have got to have dinner here, he said and ma said, I cant truthfully say I injoyed myself much at their house.

I cant truthfully say I injoyed myself at all, pop said. I wouldn't of injoyed that food even if it had been served hot, and I wouldn't of injoyed Bizzley's senseless sprouting even to the accompaniment of decent food, he said and ma said, That's just what I'm afraid of, William, I mean they're sure to injoy themselves here, because everybody always does and the contrast may give them a silly conscience, I mean making our guests uncomfortable can hardly be called repaying a social debt. Perhaps the kindest thing would simply be not to invite them, she said.

That's one way of looking at it, pop said. Unfortunately there's another way. Even an unpleasant social debt cant be left unpaid without impairing your social credit, he said, and ma said, Then you think we awt to ask them back. Now William, you know you're secretly wincing and shuddering at the thawt, You're just trying to protect me because you know I'm the one they'll blame if they dont hear from us. But I'm willing to bare the brunt of it for your sake, William. I wont invite them, so you can stop worrying, she said.

If I wasn't a gallant man I'd say this was a woman's world, pop said.

Being the end of the subject.

POLICE INQUIRY

Mayor Reaume told The Canadian Press Sunday night that Mr. Bell, who now has returned to Chatham, is arranging for an interview with the Detroit Police Commissioner and also may "seek interviews with Detroit characters" named in various reports as having information about Windsor's crime and vice picture.

Recalled by Chatham

Mayor Reaume indicated that reports from Mr. Bell would not likely be available for at least a week. The inquiry will be recalled by the chairman of the Police Commission, Magistrate Angus W. MacMillan after the commission has reviewed the reports. The third member of the commission is County Judge Albert J. Gordon.

Morality Sgt. George Browne of the Windsor police has already interviewed two Detroit informants, it was also learned. The sergeant was directed by the inquiry to aid Counsel Bell, and is understood to have had weekend interviews with two Detroit men, Chris Scroy and Stan Baron.

Scroy now is in jail at Detroit awaiting trial on a charge of attempted murder of Maxie Stern, alleged gangster. He told reporters that his brother and a cousin were victims of a gangland slaying because of an attempt to "muscle in" on a gambling syndicate in Windsor. The two persons he mentioned, Sam Scroy and Pete Liddle, have been missing for some months.

Baron, 45, now is in a Detroit hospital following an alleged attempt to commit suicide. He told reporters that he had lost $1,400 during three weeks at Windsor gambling dens. Whether Scroy or Baron will appear before the Windsor inquiry, or testimony from them will be heard, is not known.

Created a Stir

A third interview was reported during the weekend. Mr. Bell was understood to have seen Albert Viggers, now in Essex county jail awaiting trial on charge of assault. Viggers created a stir in city police court Saturday by demanding of Magistrate Hanrahan the privilege of testifying at the inquiry. Viggers was reported to have told the Magistrate "I know all about the handbooks. . . I'll tell them where the race wire service headquarters is."

Magistrate Hanrahan himself testified Thursday that he knew of the location of a racing-wire service but that it was given him in confidence. Counsel Bell said that at that time he would like to interview the source of the information.

QUEBEC PRELATES

"Credulously bringing organized labor into participation in management, profits and property of the enterprise," the prelates said "will contribute powerfully to re-establishment of the confidence so much desired between collaborators in a common undertaking."

Such reforms, however would have to be achieved with "prudence" although they were considered urgently necessary. Reforms would have to "respect the nature of enterprise and safeguard the legitimate rights of the owners of the means of production."

Are in Error Claim

"The leaders of enterprise, who in the name of an absolutist conception of ownership, do not believe in sharing certain of their responsibilities with the workers are in error, an error which could be fatal," the prelates said.

The letter, to be read in all churches in the province next Sunday, was signed by 25 prelates, heads of all the dioceses in the province and those outside the province proper which for purposes of church administration are considered part of Quebec.

They included Archbishops Maurice Roy of Quebec, Alexandre Vachon of Ottawa, and Georges Gourcheres of Rimouski. Other heads of dioceses outside Quebec who signed were Bishops Louis Rheaume of Timmins, William J. Smith of Pembroke, and Msgr. Henri Belleau, apostolic vicar of James' Bay.

The pastoral letter was based on papal encyclicals and on social doctrine such as the encyclicals rerum novarum and quadragesimo anno.

Recommend Support

It recommended support of the 90,000-member Canadian Catholic Confederation of Labor, support of state measures to combat communism and endorsement of the work of the Sacerdotal Commission on social studies, a body appointed by the Episcopate to study and make pronouncements on social questions.

"The spirit of insubordination, lack of respect toward authority . . . has gripped many of our workers," the letter said. The resistance to labor "in certain quarters," which the prelates did not identify, had produced in many "a spirit of strife" and spurred them to "excessive demands".

The prelates recommended established of a "corporative organization" to unite workers and employers' groups.

"It is through the corporative institution . . . we will ensure that economic and social life will function for the good of all members of society."

The corporative organization, as advocated by the prelates, "must favor homecrafts, small and medium industry so that enterprises of this type, which are more within the grasp of man, will not be crushed by invincible competition."

DAIRY INDUSTRY

"Our industry cannot afford to sit back and see its markets undermined," Mr. Duplan said, "and I suggest to you that sales promotion activities on our domestic market should represent No. 1 project of every dairyman in Canada in the years ahead."

The welfare of 17 per cent of the Canadian population, which directly and indirectly derived its livelihood from the $600,000,000 dairy industry, was at stake, he said.

Played Into Hands of Groups

People who argued in favor of bringing margarine to Canadians unwittingly played into the hands of those groups who were carrying on an inspired campaign for the introduction of substitutes."

These groups comprised in part of those who stood to gain financially by the sale of a product manufactured by foreign oils, and, in part by their small but extremely vocal section of our population who thrive on destructive agitation of any kind."

Introduction of the imitation butter product in the space of one year caused:

1. A reduction of $50,000,000 in the purchasing power of Canadian farmers,

2. A 30,000,000-pound surplus of butter in the hands of the government, constituting an investment of $10,000,000 of the taxpayer's money.

3. An expenditure of $10,000,000 in "badly-needed United States funds" for vegetable oils used in the manufacture of 98 per cent of the margarine consumed in Canada.

He present price differentials between butter and margarine prevail, Mr. Duplan said, "margarine will retain in an even greater surplus of butter than last year and an even greater drop in farm purchasing power."

"A reduction in this purchasing power of $10,000,000 can have but one result — reduced out of manufactured goods and services which farmers and their families require, and a consequent increase in unemployment in such manufacturing and service industries."

Dr. Duplan said "the surplus of butter now on hand is directly and solely attributable to its replacement by margarine. In Ontario alone butter consumption dropped 25,000,000 pounds in 1949."

Bergman Likely To be Allowed Entry to U.S.

Los Angeles, March 18. (AP) —Will the moral turpitude bar of the United States immigration service be imposed against Ingrid Bergman when the actress returns to California to fight for custody of her daughter?

Yes, or it should be, says Senator Edwin C. Johnson (Dem.-Colo.).

We'll discuss it later, declared Washington spokesmen Friday night. They'll wait until the actress applies for re-entry.

Landon, however, expressed the persons, unofficial opinion that he could see little or no occasion to invoke the moral turpitude clause of the U.S. code in Miss Bergman's case. He quoted the law as affecting "persons who have been convicted of, or admit having committed, a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude."

Senator Johnson gave the following court definition of the term:

"The term moral turpitude has often been done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty or good morals, which in itself is one of baseness, vileness and depravity in the private and social duties which one owes to his fellow men or to society, as distinguished from crimes that is wrong merely because it is prohibited by law."

The clause is invoked mainly against incoming aliens, usually for such crimes as theft or burglary.

Meanwhile, counsel for Dr. Peter Lindstrom, her husband, was marshalling documents to file counter charges against the actress, who also has asked for $154,000 outright and an accounting of property held jointly by her and her husband.

All-Meat Packages Announced by CARE

Ottawa—Two all-meat packages designed to aid European countries still facing severe meat shortages were announced today by CARE.

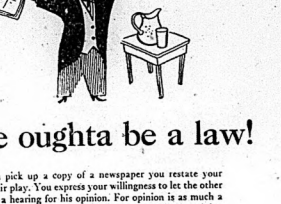
One of the packages, containing 16 pounds of meats, may be ordered, at $11.00, for delivery to friends, relatives and other needy persons in Austria, England, Scotland, Northern Ireland, Eire, France, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands and Norway, CARE Representative for Canada, Neil MacNeil said.

The other package, especially packed for the Eastern zone of Germany, contains 10 pounds, 2 ounces of a variety of meats. Its price is $9.00. Delivery is guaranteed on all CARE packages.

"These two packages were especially designed to serve the needs of those European countries where severe meat shortages continue to exist and where consequently the lack of other substantial food forms a continued danger to public health," MacNeil said.

Millions of Pounds Food

Stressing that in little more than four years of operations CARE has channelled American and Canadian aid in the form of 9 millions of its food and textile packages, valued at $90 million to needy at no cost overseas countries, MacNeil declared:



"CARE and its member agencies feel certain that the American people, who in the past have so substantially aided their friends overseas, will welcome these all-meat CARE packages as especially appropriate means of continued help in a most concentrated form."

Orders for the all-meat packages can now be placed with any local CARE outlet, or directly with CARE, 73 Albert Street, Ottawa, Ontario.

The 16-pound, $11.00 package contains: 3 lbs. of beef in gravy; 2 lbs. of beef in tomato juices; 1½ lbs. of corned beef; 2 lbs. corned beef hash; 2¼ lbs. pork luncheon meat; 1¼ lbs. pork sausage; 1½ lbs. bacon; 1 lb Hamburger; and 8 ounces of liver paste.

The $9.00 East German meat package contains 10 lbs. 12 ozs. of meat, including: 4 lbs. beef in gravy; 3 lbs. 12 ozs. pork luncheon meat; and 3 lbs. of bacon.

When you pick up a copy of a newspaper you restate your belief in fair play. You express your willingness to let the other fellow get a hearing for his opinion. For opinion is as much a part of the newspaper as fact. Not just the editor's opinion but the opinions of business men and labor leaders, farmers and housewives, public officials and candidates for office—everyone whose opinions make news.

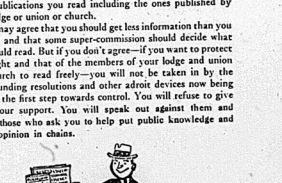
Some men and women think you should not have this freedom. They believe you should read only one set of opinions—theirs. They think there should be a law limiting what a newspaper can print.

Those whose freedom these self-constituted leaders are aiming to limit are not so much the editors and publishers of newspapers as the readers. They claim that newspapers have too much freedom but what they mean is that you are too free. They don't talk about thought control but that is what they have in mind. They don't trust you with the knowledge of what is going on in the world —even what is happening in your own government.



They know that if they can control what you read, they can control what you know. And when they control what you know, they can control your mind. Under the claim of knowing what is good for you, they want to take over your thinking. Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin used the same technique.

Of course, the newspaper isn't your only source of information. But if the attack on the newspaper is successful, you can be sure that the magazines and books and the radio won't be overlooked. The newspaper happens to be the first target because it is the main source of your information regarding the events and trends about which these men and women want to keep you in ignorance. Once the newspaper is muzzled, the others will be easy.

If you think your right to know isn't in danger, take the time to read the proposals that are being offered. Apply these recommended press regulations to this newspaper and to the other publications you read including the ones published by your lodge or union or church.

You may agree that you should get less information than you now get and that some super-commission should decide what you should read. But if you don't agree—if you want to protect your right and that of the members of your lodge and union and church to read freely—you will not be taken in by the high sounding resolutions and other adroit devices now being used as the first step towards control. You will refuse to give them your support. You will speak out against them and against those who ask you to help put public knowledge and public opinion in chains.

Dude College

By Oren Arnold

Despite the unfortunate personal element here, this was precisely the logical meeting with Lena Montoya that he had wanted. Logical, and natural, so as to arouse suspicions from no one.

He forced himself to be reasonable reminding himself that the fellow Wesley York was probably just some passing whim of Ronicca's, a boor not to be taken seriously; he could deal with that later. Now, here at hand was this beautiful Mexican girl who was in addition, carrying the very badge of intrigue he had been told to seek. The crutch at her side was definite proof that she was working for his own employers in the precarious business of espionage.

But—perhaps she was not!

Perhaps her crutch was a coincidence, her sprained ankle genuine. Sudden realization of that possibility rather frightened him. He wondered if he ought to look about town for another person who knew Lena. But no—no, he could at least test this girl, delicately and make sure of his ground.

"Pepper kid, you call her," Lena was saying. "I think it has spoiled spice!"

"Don't take her seriously." Andre was fumbling in his pocket. There, he carried the ring with the chrysocolla stone.

"Girls do not steal men from Lena Montoya, senor!"

Lena glanced down, saw the ring.

Slowly, her eyes widened. She looked up at the crowd quickly. She looked right and left. Before Andre's gaze her expression changed completely. She took a deep breath and ventured one studied look in his face. For a long moment she said nothing. Then—

"That las—a-pretty ring. Yes?"

"Your crutch must be a nuisance," Andre whispered.

Her lips tightened, and her voice dropped to a whisper.

"Fool!" She almost spat it. "Why have you wished to hang? These crutches—have anybody—see, and—the high ones are demand action from us at once!"

They climbed the stone stair with the beautiful wrought iron railing, passed through the gymnasium balcony and out an arched door onto the roof of another arched colonnade such as connected the Pueblo University buildings around a large patio. The roof here made a promenade with a knee-high rail, and Andre led Lena Montoya into a room shadow cast by a high, rustling palm tree.

She put aside her crutch now because they were quite alone. Music from the dance floor seeped out and up to them suggesting a subtle background for romance but only Andre responded to its suggestion. He looked at Lena with a sudden amused, half-smirking smile.

"You're beautiful when you are angry," he informed her.

"Did you come here on business or on pleasure?" Her voice was snappish. "You have taken too many drinks already tonight."

"Oh, take it easy, kid. I think we could get along fine!" He fingered her arm up and down. "Would you like a drink yourself now!"

"I am being paid to do a job and you are being paid to do a job Mr. Girardeau. And we both know we are found ourdered if we fail. Why do I have to remind you of that?"

Andre laughed. "This isn't the moment for business! This is—a lovely autumn evening. Look at the stars my dear."

"I am not 'your dear'."

He smiled genially at her. He had been walking slowly with an arm around her. As if in deference to her sprained ankle, which both knew was pretence. He held her a little closer, noting—with satisfaction—that she did not resist, despite her words. He wanted her to feel his strong arm.

"Like it, you?" He purred that ever so intimately, "Like me?"

She didn't answer.

But she sat on the low railing

REACH FOR A RENNIE

20 feet above the patio grass, and listened while he paid her sincerous compliments. It was exceedingly easy to listen to suave Andre Girardeau. His technique was a studied one that he had used many times before.

The patio there was really a half-acre courtyard,' landscaped with grass as rich as a golf green with shrubs that banked impressively against the tan buildings with tall curved palms and with vines that somehow managed to bedeck themselves with flowers even in fall. It had been an obvious place for Ronnie Bailey to lead her distressed professor friend when she wanted privacy. They had found a rustic bench beside a trickling fountain, and Ronica was sitting in the dim moonlight, hands behind her neck and head back so that she looked up at him. She was beauty itself in this perfect setting, but Wesley was too upset to observe such things now.

"Stand if you prefer, Wes. But please start talking."

"I, uh, Ronnie, I—"He took out his handkerchief to mop his chin, although he could hardly have been perspiring.

"Yes?" she encouraged. "We are out here to explain things. Aren't we?"

"Quite so. I mean—yes, Ronnie!" He sat down beside her. "I hope you will not stay angry at me, I—I came to your home. But your father said—he said that this, uh, Girardeau was taking you to the dance and Girardeau was just ahead of me."

Ronnie's knees were crossed and she was swinging one very shapely lower limb as if to express impatience.

"On the contrary, Wes, you arrived just ahead of Andre. He met me just inside your car, Daddy said. He had been drinking. You couldn't have come in first. Indeed I don't care what daddy told you. He's an old dear but you didn't have to listen to him. You made the date with me, not with him."

"You—you really would have gone to the dance with me? Me? Wesley held out a hand as if in supplication.

"Certainly!"

He looked away, contrite. Ronnie watched him mockingly.

"Wes," she resumed, kindly, "why did you think I might not? Didn't you believe me?"

He nodded. "At first. But—oh, goodness, Ronnie, you really are a lady in every way! To be very frank, I was scared. I, uh, have not had many dates for years. I have but little money, whereas you, the Baileys, and this Girardeau— He paused still looking off.

"I think I understand, Wes. But it's foolish. I mean, unfair."

"I know. But this Girardeau mistook me for a servant and said so. I was trying to apologize for any car damage, when—"

Under the spell of her kindness there the young professor talked himself out. He told more than he had meant to, really; more of his inner feelings.

But he found this good, and it somehow warmed him to Ronica Bailey more than ever, although to keep from revealing this new warmth of feeling he presently lapsed back into a formal manner of speech. When they had talked for perhaps half an hour Ronnie stood up.

"I'm so happy we understand each other," she said, "and I think I shall go explain more to Andre now."

"No," said Wes, with sudden determination. "I shall go myself I—I wish to demonstrate that I am not, uh, afraid of him. Not awed."

He left her at once. She was smiling at his boyish way, which could be in such contrast to Wesley York, the professor. She sat down again to wait, and with arms still behind her head she gazed at the gymnasium with its lights inside and at the arched colonnade bathed in moon glow.

Her attention was attracted by the figures on the colonnade man and girl, on the roof. Apparently the girl was sitting, the man standing over her.

Ronnie leaned forward, straining to see. The two on the roof were no more than black forms not quite clear in silhouette. Curious, she strolled over toward the colonnade to stare upward, and began to hear talking although words were indistinguishable in the music from the dance floor.

Then all at once a door from the gymnasium balcony opened and Wesley stood in unmistakable outline up there. He saw the two figures at once and hastened to them and spoke.

Her pardon, but this is hardly a safe place for—"

"You again, eh!" said a voice, unmistakably Andre's, "I suppose you'd prefer to kiss her . yourself!"

Ronnie saw the dark shadows merge, heard the sound of a blow. And then—

Somebody toppled over the low roof railing!

Quite involuntarily, Ronnie screamed.

Thick privet, allowed to bunch itself artistically against the arches that formed the colonnade saved Wesley York from serious injury and may even have saved his life. Dropping from the roof was a good 20 feet.

Ronnie Bailey screamed just once—a shrill little EE-E-EEE!"—and was running to him before Wes could scramble out of the shrubbery. Lena Montoya and Andre Girardeau, appalled.

"I—I didn't mean to do that!" Andre called, inadequately. "It was—"

"I should hope not!" Ronica said. "Did you strike him?" Wes was making a lot of noise coming out of the bush and she was reaching in to help him. "Wes! Are you—all right?"

"I don't know. Y-yes. Scratched and—bruised—whew!"

He spoke tremblingly and was helped out. Ronnie finally helped him out onto the open grass. "It might have killed me. I —see here, Ronnie, I must go to him at once! I—"

"You won't! Come with me. Hurry!"

"I tell you I must go to him! I was taken by surprise. No man can deliberately endanger my life that way. I—I am quite without some strength! I am an excellent swimmer. My muscles are—"

"Oh, you men! All you think of is muscles. Come on with me, Wesley York, before I use muscles on you myself. Golly, what a night!"

Kilbon Trial in 'Mercy Killing' Of Wife Opens at Cobourg

Neighbor Testifies Accused Said 'Wife Was in Agony'

Cobourg, March 21 — (CP) — Ralph Kilbon, on trial for the murder of his wife, was quoted today as saying she tried to commit suicide and was "in such great agony that I finished her"

The testimony came from Charles Barnard, a neighbor, who said he was summoned by Kilbon shortly after Mrs. Irene Kilbon, 54, died of rifle wounds last Nov. 1.

Barnard related to Mr. Justice Dalton Wells and a Supreme Court jury that Kilbon, 56-year-old retired engineer, was "calm" as he told of his wife's death.

The trial started today after a 15-man grand jury returned a true bill of murder. Testimony was similar to that heard at a preliminary hearing. Doctors said Mrs. Kilbon suffered from an incurable disease, Huntingdon's chorea, which affected her mentally and sometimes gives rise to suicidal tendencies.

Covered Phone Call

Barnard said he went to the Kilbon's 18-room house at Ballyboro, 15 miles northwest of this Lake Ontario town, in response to a telephone call his wife had received from Kilbon.

"He was standing by the outside steps when I arrived," said Barnard. "He said to me, 'Irene shot herself while I was out for a pail of water and when I came in she was in such great agony that I finished her.'

"He then asked me to call (a doctor and the police). Mr. Kilbon was very calm. I left immediately to phone for the doctor and the police. A neighbor, Fred Perrin, and myself later went back to keep Mr. Kilbon company. Mr. Kilbon sat in the car with us for about half an hour.

"Dr. Russell came in and Mr. Kilbon accompanied him into the house. While we were in the car, he mentioned that he went out for the water, Irene had put the gun on the table and shot herself.

"He said again that he could stand to see her in such pain (finished her.' Mr. Kilbon refrained his calm composure throughout."

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Toronto, March 21 — (CP) — Synopsis: On this first morning of spring, temperatures have moderated to more seasonable levels over most of Canada. Below zero readings are to be found only in the Northwest Territories, with the Ontario early morning temperatures range from around 15 to 20 degrees in the mining towns of the north to near 30 degrees in southern Ontario.

A weakening eastward-moving storm over Ohio caused an area of rain to skirt the north shore of Lake Erie into the Niagara Peninsula and along the south shore of Lake Ontario. This belt of rain will miss the province as the storm's eastward course, and cloudy skies with occasional sunshine breaking through is forecast for most of Ontario today and Wednesday.

Savage Attack, Robbery Bring Seven-Year Term

North Bay March 21 — (CP) — James Woodliffe, 17, of Hamilton today was sentenced to seven years in Kingston penitentiary for a savage attack and robbery of 62-year-old Schalim Lazarowitsch. Woodliffe pleaded guilty to the charge of robbery with violence.

Woodliffe went into the Lazarowitsch store last March 12, and said that he desired to purchase an outfit of clothes for bush work. When Lazarowitsch turned to get a garment off a rack, he was struck across the back of the head, apparently with the handle of an axe he was showing Woodliffe. After striking the store owner several times Woodliffe fled, but was arrested later.

Crocuses and Flowering Shrubs Herald Early Spring in Britain

That March 21 business is so much nonsense—spring has come to Britain already.

Two swans majestically announced the fact last week, cruising in out of the blue to land in with a splash in the narrowest Thames. It's their mating season, and their one progress down the flood-swollen river is a sign of the breaking of the shackles of winter.

The gardener cutting the lawn for the first time last week had to be careful to avoid the yellow and blue crocuses in careless profusion. He worked in shirt sleeves in a 55-degree sun leaving rough edges to be trimmed later around the trunks wild-curren trees already in full blossom.

Weekend fishermen, who all winter have patiently lined the river banks to angle "fruitlessly" in the freezing tide, now have been joined by owners of pleasure craft moored on either side of the stream.

FILIBUSTER ROLLS ON UNABATED IN THE COMMONS

Opposition Continues To Urge Canada Route

Ottawa, Mar. 21—(CP)—The pipe-line filibuster rolled on unabated in the Commons Monday.

Day-long debate swirled around the question of whether a charter should be granted to the Alberta Natural Gas Company, which proposes to build a line to transport natural gas from the Alberta oil field to potential consumers in British Columbia.

An increasing stream of C.C.F. and Progressive Conservative speakers joined in the ranks of those urging that the company first undertake to build an all-Canadian pipe-line—rather than one running through United States territory—before receiving incorporation.

The debate, on a private bill introduced by Ralph Maybank (C.—Winnipeg South Centre), occupied the first day of this session devoted solely to study of private members' legislation.

Two party leaders stepped into the debate to urge the danger of their followers that the company will run its line to the Pacific coast through American territory and that American consumers will have first call on this Canadian resource.

The leaders were George Drew Progressive Conservative chieftain, and M.J. Coldwell, of the C.C.F.

Chance Phone Call Probably Saves Mother

Toronto, March 21. —(CP)— Firemen believe a chance phone call by 22-year-old Beverley Winterfield may have saved the life of his mother today.

Firemen worked over Mrs. Helen Winterfield with an inhalator for nearly two hours before she was revived from the effects of coal gas fumes.

Winterfield, a milkman, was out on his route when he "suddenly got the notion he call home." He heard his mother gasp in the alcove of the hall.

He rushed home in a taxi and found his mother unconscious at the bottom of her home. He called firemen and a doctor immediately.

BILL TO ALLOW TEACHERS SEATS ON COUNCILS READ

Toronto, March 21. (CP) — School teachers, at present barred from membership on municipal councils, will be allowed to stand for election through an amendment to the Municipal Act introduced Monday in the Ontario legislature.

Municipal Affairs Minister, Dunbar introduced the bill amending the act and then piloted through second reading another bill to provide for appointment of two vice-chairmen of the Ontario Municipal Board.

The legislature today begins the budget debate with the address of C.C.F. Leader E. B. Jolliffe. The House will hold its first night sitting of the current session tonight and Premier Frost has promised another night sitting Thursday to discuss the report of the legislature's conservation committee, tabled Monday.

Another amendment to the Municipal Act extends from 14 to 28 days the time permitted for filing objections to any annexation or amalgamation order issued by the Board. If sufficient objection is filed with the board during the new period a private bill in the legislature is required to enforce the board's order.

Anglers and Hunters Oppose 'Homesteading' Crown Forests Unless Soil Fit for Farming

Toronto, March 21 — (CP) — The Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters today told the Ontario legislature's select game committee that "homesteading" of Crown woodlands should not be permitted unless complete examination has shown the soil is suitable for successful farming.

The federation's brief was submitted today to the first meeting of the committee chaired by President H. V. Sutton.

The federation's Forest Department should have authority to regulate timber cutting methods from cruisers and housebooks licensed by federal authorities, the brief said.

Protection Against Poaching

Full warden protection should be provided against poaching, especially of moose, in provincial wildlife sanctuaries. Every license should be provided with a digest of game laws and fish regulations.

Bearing of firearms while intoxicated should be subject to the same penalties as drunk driving. Hunting by wardens should be at least equal those of the Ontario Provincial Police.

All lakes of the Legislature should be requested to attend the committee's meetings, the federation said.

The Fairwash Industrial Prison farm "is either a reserve, held by and for all the people of Ontario, or it is not a reserve," the brief said.

The federation said partridge hunters recently arrested in the prison area "would not have been guilty had they been friends of and had permission from" the superintendent.

The federation expressed itself as "extremely dissatisfied" with the stand of the government on water pollution. It called for appointment of a Royal Commission on pollution.

No game fish should be allowed to be exported from Ontario to United States markets.

George Bishop, president of the Northumberland Fish and Game Association, presented a brief asking that Crown game refuges should be posted at border crossing points to assure all licences of non-residents are issued.

Would Tie Up Foreign Aircraft

Foreign aircraft should be required to be tied up at official ports of entry when not in use, while owners hunt or fish, he said.

A. B. Salsberg (Lab.-Prog. — Toronto St. Andrew) said he had been advised United States anglers were flying into northern lakes, fishing without licences and returning without declaring spending a penny in Ontario.

A. Roy Brunelle (C.—Toronto St. David) said there was extensive "Squatting" on Crown lands in the minister's constituency (Peterborough).".

A brief presented by the Peterborough Fish and Game Protective Association urged that the powers-owners section of the Peterborough Chamber of Commerce, asked there be no change in the opening of the pickerel season. May 15. They also opposed any fish licrease in cost of non-resident angler's fees.

Dr. Hearkness of the Lands and Forest Department said the license fees have been changed to include a booklet giving fishing regulations. He said increased costs of publishing the license and increased value to tourists warranted raising the increased price.

Finance Minister To Bring Down Budget March 28

Ottawa, March 21—(CP)—Finance Minister Abbott will bring down his 1950-51 budget at 8 p.m. EST Tuesday, March 28, but few observers expect it to compare with the tax-shaking pre-election budget of 1949-50.

Mr. Abbott told the Commons Monday that barring developments which he does not anticipate, he will not examine government of the House so that he may start reading his budget speech after dinner adjournment. Ordinarily the first hour on Tuesdays is devoted to study of private bills.

As is customary, the Minister has dropped no hints of what the budget will contain. However, the feeling in political circles is to the effect that any tax relief is likely to be slight.

Accelerated expenditures have been catching up to revenues which have been declining largely as a result of the $375,000,000 cut in taxes provided in the last budget.

That budget, which covered the year ending March 31, first was introduced in the Commons March 12, 1949. It was amplified before the general federal election on June 27 and had to be reintroduced in the fall session of parliament.

Personal income tax changes highlighted the 1949-50 budget, accounting for $275,000,000 of the reductions announced by Mr. Abbott.

Bills to be Paid

Mr. Abbott warned at the time, however, that he would pay the bills for which the government could not collect before the end of the year. These would include amounts to cover such things as the Atlantic Pact and International Railways and Trans-Canada Airlines.

Some observers feel that a surplus of $50,000,000 would give Mr. Abbott only limited room in which to make tax reductions unless he is prepared to resort to deficit financing. His theory in the last few years has been that the government should budget for a surplus in good years to offset the deficit in years when government activity is needed to stimulate employment of the country and provide employment.

1950-51 would be the third in a row, amounted to $595,000,000.

CRITICIZES CHIEF

TWO CHILDREN PERISH IN HAWKESBURY FIRE

Mother Absent From Home for Brief Period

Hawkesbury, March 21 (CP) — Two children were burned to death today in a $10,000 fire which razed through a one-storey brick duplex in downtown Hawkesbury while their mother was absent for a few minutes.

Dead are Joan St. Albert, 3, and Raymond, 2, children of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Glover. Another child, Richard, 5, escaped from the burning building and suffered only minor shock.

The other section of the duplex was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Eves Lalonde and their two small children, all of whom escaped unhurt.

Went Shopping

Mrs. Glover said she left the house for a few minutes to shop at the corner store. She returned to find the building in flames and firemen and spectators had to forcibly restrain her from rushing into the burning building.

Cause of the fire was not immediately determined.

Bodies of the two child victims were recovered, by Hawkesbury Police Chief Fidore Gervais.

Firemen managed to save part of the house occupied by the Lalonde family but that belonging to the Glovers was destroyed with its furnishings.

The father of the burned children is employed in Montreal.

Snow-Weary West Feels Relief As Winter Ends

Winnipeg, Mar. 21—(CP)—The calendar skipped kind winter in the face today and cold-and-snow-weary Western Canada breathed a cautious sigh of relief.

Today, the first day of spring, found frequent omens of winter's leave-taking popping up throughout the west. But parka-clad weatherer, with distant memories of below-zero temperatures and unparalled mountains of snow, treated the signs carefully.

Citizens dodged mud-splashes, changed their beavers for fedoras, and began looking for conclusive signs.

Some optimists noted: A horned lark on a golf-course fairway still dotted with snow; a young lady with a huge armful of pussy willows; a bird's snow checking for summer home.

Everywhere temperatures were a bit above normal.

In Alberta, the second thaw of the season hailed the province in above-40 sunshine. Medicine Hat in the east and Whitecourt in the north recorded identical 45s. At Snag, Y.T., the outpost with all the weather records, it was 30 below.

Saskatchewan and Manitoba temperatures were near the 40-mark too. Spring thaws were general and the prediction was for more of the same.

However, the western citizen has been too often fooled by spring's smile to expect too much. Many a long-haired citizen will enjoy her while she's here, but express no surprise is she has to leave when things are getting interesting.

Lords Discuss Violence of 'Kid Gangs' And Fact More Criminals Are Armed

London, March 21. (AP)—Spurred by a Canadian peer, the House of Lords today discusses what to do about Britain's wave of juvenile crime.

Britons of all classes are getting more and more incensed at the sickening violence of Britain's post-war "kid gangs".

Worse still, to the average Britton, is the fact that more and more of the youths are carrying guns—and this is a land where ordinary policemen traditionally are not armed.

The Lords will take up the growing use by jittery youngsters of the gun, the broken bottle, the lead pipe and the straight razor.

Heading the list of suggested measures for curbing this is the possibility of making legal once again the use of the dread "cat o' nine tails"—mere mention of which makes the most hardened British criminal wince.

Police authorities blame the new violence in crime on the pasty-faced kid with the gun who gets jittery when he pulls a job. Generally, he's a product of the war—either having the thrill of wartime commando raids in his blood, or having been neglected in adolescence by his parents who were overworking in the war effort.

Seven Provinces Appeal Against Freight-Rate Boost

Railways Granted 16 P.C. Increases Over Sept. Levels

Ottawa, March 21 — (CP) — Seven provincial governments today appealed to the cabinet against the last two freight-rate increases granted the railways, which boosted authorized rates 16 per cent above the levels of last September.

At the same time, they called on the cabinet to stay the application of the last increase, which is due to go into effect Thursday. Awarded March 1, it amounts to 7.4 per cent on existing rates.

'Interim' Award

The other increase which the provinces are appealing was awarded as an "interim" measure by the Board of Transport Commissioners last Sept. 20, following an application for a rise of 19 per cent for a 20-per-cent hoist. On March 1, the board gave the railways an additional eighth-per-cent of the original 20, which works out to 16 per cent all rates.

The seven provinces — all except Ontario, Quebec and Newfoundland — appealed against both the awards on a five-point basis, invoking the powers of the Governor-in-Council (cabinet) to revoke or rescind the board's orders.

Nor was there any indication of how fast the Cabinet would move. But, judging from its pace in the last rate appeal of 1948, there appeared little chance that it would step in before the railways actually put their increased rates into effect Thursday.

However, it could alter or disallow the increase at any time.

In the 1948 appeal of the same provinces from a general 21-per-cent increase granted by the board, the Cabinet did not take direct action to disallow the award but referred the issue back to the board for reconsideration. Today, the appealing provinces contended that the board in granting the 16-per-cent increase "applied principles which it should not have applied" and which are contrary to public policy, and has been otherwise subject to error in law, entailing a substantial miscarriage of justice.

Say Board Was Wrong

A major ground was that the board was wrong in granting a further increase because, they said, which it claimed disregarded and accentuated existing "disparities" in the freight-rate structure.

Further, said the provinces in their appeal document to the board, if it had to put a percentage increase into effect, served again in not limiting the authorized increase to flat maximum amounts or in other ways.

(Sevegra) of the provinces in their appeal document to the board some form of limiting the effects of percentage increases should be made to keep long-haul traffic, particularly on basic commodities.

UNEMPLOYMENT PICTURE ACROSS CANADA BETTER

Ottawa, March 21 (CP) — A steady stream of seasonal returning to work in British Columbia's big lumbering industry sparked further improvement in the employment situation in Canada during February.

The number of persons seeking work through national employment offices declined by 5,000 in the three-week period from Feb. 9 to March 2, the Labor Department said Monday.

For the month of February the unemployment insurance bill totalled $13,600,000.

A detailed summary of working conditions in the country, the department placed the number of Canadians seeking work at 375,900 at March 2, compared with the peak unemployment total at Feb. 9 of 380,900 and 375,300 at Feb. 16.

The March 2 total includes 3,000 new registrants provided through extension by fishermen of unemployment insurance benefits. The department said local employment offices across the country had received about 12,000 applications for supplementary benefits, with about 9,000 from persons already registered.

"In British Columbia workers are returning to their jobs in logging camps and sawmills as camps and sawmills are reopened and as construction projects are resumed," the report said.

Openings Increasing

"Job openings are increasing in many manufacturing industries as inventories are reduced by purchaser factories, agricultural implement plants and shipyards begin to step up production in anticipation of spring demand.

"Industry in the Eastern Canada have provided more employment in the logging industry. In some sections of the country, local employment offices report a more cheerful outlook from farmers as they prepare for spring operations.

Rotarian Outlines Formula of Public Speaking

If members of the Rotary Club here are not polished or "finished" conclusions gathered after Monday day's weekly luncheon, it won't be fault of Rotarian Grant Sparling, Rotarian Sparling flocks lilted as the luncheon speaker when it was found the scheduled orator could not put in an appearance.

In a humor-sprinkled address on the Borden Formula of Public Speaking, Rotarian Sparling enlightened his fellow clubmen on the art of post-luncheon oratorical periodic outbursts of good-natured heckling.

He outlined the four phases of the Borden Formula, i.e. "Ho-Hum", "Why Bring That Up?" "For Instance" and "So What!"

To counter-act a possible "Ho-Hum" attitude, it is important for the orator to wake up the audience and keep it awake, Rotarian Sparling said. He should interest the audience in himself, have an all right but should be those told on himself or a member of his family. This method of approach fails then stories of human interest or those of a pathetic nature can be used.

Don't Hold Same Interest

As for the "Why Bring That Up?" phase, Rotarian Sparling said that all subjects do not hold the same interest to people, and the speaker must create interest in his subject, declare it and work into it. Employ the bulletin to make it.

"Suppose", he went on," a speaker started to speak in support of the Liberal Party and opened with "Why Bring That Up"—laughter) or express the good qualities of that party's policies, compared to be that of Rotarian Mackenzie Robertson—"That is necessary") or on any subject of that nature, he should stay awake as he develops his subject.

"The Duke of Gloucester once had a dream. He spoke of a dream in which he saw himself making a speech to the House of Lords. He woke up and discovered that he was."

Speakers should use careful language and state their words clearly, fluttering nothing advised. The vocabulary of the average Canadian is the same in all stations and the press. He urged the use of vivid adjectives and verbs of action and not technical terms of professional jargon. People resent it. Speakers should think and use the easiest terms in their arguments.

Statistics, he felt, usually go in one ear and out the other. To be of interest they should be harnessed to facts of human interest, illustrating his point but he would be of more interest to people. He quoted from time there was beer enough consumed in Canada in 1947 to provide each resident with 11½ gallons, than to quote the gallonage consumed by the gallon as a whole. The dazed old-fashioned oratory are over, he felt.

Last Part Important

Referring to the "So What!" phase, the speaker pointed out that the last part of the speech or utterances are the most important. A good speaker takes all the ammunition he has and uses it. To be dress and lets it off with a bang. The concluding things is what are how to move people and what tactics to use to deplement. And if there were too many vegetables used in the closing minutes of the lecture or address, "let us do this," or "lettuce bear in mind."

"Lettuce is all right in its place but a little oil now and then aids greatly. A speaker should use an appeal to the emotions in the most sensible way he can. He should use the best method of speech preparation and delivery because he should try to convince his audience that his theory is the best."

The speaker was introduced by Rotarian Dick Cowan with club appreciation expressed by Rotarian George Campbell. President Fred Denyon was in the chair and formally welcomed the "baby" members of the club, Rotarians Jack Yanovery and Alan Sprague.

Ninety-two stitches were necessary to close the wounds caused when a skate slashed his fingers after young Wallbridge had fallen to the ice in the path of a girl skater.

The youth had donned his skates and had stepped on the ice when he was jostled accidentally by another skater. The impact knocked him to the ice and before he could reach his feet a skate of the girl passed over his outstretched hand.

He was taken to the hospital where he received treatment until yesterday afternoon. The youth will be under medical observation in case of injury to the nerves of his hand.

MARMORA

Truck Loaded With Cattle Hit by Train

Marmora—An accident occurred at the CNR crossing on No. 7 highway, about a quarter mile east of the village at noon on Monday when a truck owned by Gerald Tanner of Madoc was in collision with a train going north. The truck loaded with 14 head of cattle, was driven by Keith Hayes of Madoc. The truck struck the rear end of the train and turned over in the middle of the track. The driver escaped without injury but the livestock also freed from the truck. The front part of the truck was damaged to some extent with bent fenders and front. P. Constable T. Lammins of Madoc, investigated.

POLICE COURT

Although there was a total of 36 cases listed on the morning police court docket, the court session was of brief duration as the great majority of the cases had been settled out of court with fines and costs paid.

Topping the list of cases were the number of charges against motorists who had persisted in making left hand turns at the Coleman and Bridge Street intersection, during the hours when such turns are prohibited. No less than 11 such motorists paid $4.50 fine and costs in police court.

Two motorists paid fines for careless driving, one driver being assessed $15 fine and costs with the other paying a total of $28 fine and costs.

Five inebriates appeared before Magistrate T. V. Wills and were given jail terms in lieu of payments of the usual fines. One man, appearing on a second offence drunk charge, had an additional month added. Baptist Church court was told that he had ordered a meal at a local restaurant and had no money to pay the fare.

Two local operators of motor cars were fined $10 each for failure to have their motors inspected.

Another was assessed $25 fine while the other was fined and was enlarged until next week.

Many Motorists Anxiously Inquire About Extension

Telephones in both the city police station and at the O.P.P. headquarters jangled constantly this morning as deliquent motorists made anxious inquiries as to whether there had been an extension granted by the Highways Department for 1949 auto licences.

And in every instance the answer was brief and to the point: "There is no extension."

"Can I drive my car down street to get my licence?" was the question next in popularity by motorists who had wafted just too long in getting their 1950 markers.

To this question officers merely replied that the deadline for 1949 plates was midnight March 20th. The motorists were told that if they have their cars with 1949 plates they were liable to prosecution.

But despite a last minute rush on the part of motorists to get their motor vehicle licences, there were quite a number of cars seen on the streets with 1949 markers.

One motorist, en route from Toronto to Montreal called at the police station seeking assistance with respect to his 1950 markers. He had left home without his ownership and was therefore unable to procure his new licence.

Peterboro Challengers Barely More Than Novices Says 'Tim'

Bellevilie may not be able to take a hockey championship from Peterboro, but they can show the sister city brushes and razors insofar as barbers and partnerships are concerned.

The Peterboro paper in a prize essay contest said Bellevilie is one in Ontario can claim a barber partnership of 30 years. Learning that was the challenge thrown out by Jack Smith and Harold Sullivan, "who have been clipping the hair and shaving faces of Belleboro menfolk for 30 years—in the same shop."

Responding to Tim Sullivan, dean of Bellevilie barbers who retired a short time ago, the Peterboro "clippers" are barely out of the apprentice class as far as longevity of "working together in the same shop," is concerned.

Gangland Gets Spring Fever

Spring didn't officially arrive until 11.26 p. m., but the police blotter showed four armed holdups, a robbery and a purse snatching by then. There were no arrests.

Three of the holdups netted a total of $1,878 and the fourth didn't got nothing but a shaking-up. A 12-year-old newsboy was after Douglas Campbell, was robbed of $20 by the knife-wielding hoodlums and thinks he also was robbed of $31 by a purse snatcher.

The youngster ended with $1-850 from the Motor Vehicles Branch of the Ontario Department of Highways in York township shortly after a police guard left.

Another gunman escaped with $50 from a grocery store. Paul Michalczak, 58, said he was all set to throw a meat cleaver at the thug but a customer was in the way.

The third gunman calmly walked into a midtown drug store and demanded drugs that to have over $75. He fled in an automobile.

An unshaven thug didn't get a thing from A. L. Bartlett, owner of a shoe store. Bartlett said the intruder tried to steal a pair of shoes and then produced a gun when he found he didn't have any from him. The gunman escaped on a streetcar after he grappled with him.

Police Crack Down on Drivers With 1949 Plates

Toronto, March 21. (CP)—Toronto and suburban police cracked down today on motorists with 1949 licence plates and operator's permits. Scores had been summoned before courts and police estimated hundreds in the Toronto area may be fined.

Today, J. D. Bickle, registrar for the Highways Department, said: "There has been no consideration given to any extension" to Monday's deadline.

The usual penalty for failure to have 1950 markers is $10 for the first offence and $20 minimum or $100 maximum for the second.

At Queen's Park, officials reported the largest crowd in the department's history jammed the licence bureau Monday and today the crowd was just as big. More than 5,000 plates were issued at Queen's Park Monday and another 5,000 in other branch offices in the Toronto district.

There was no official estimate available as to the number of motorists still using 1949 plates.

Dr. Sander Must Clear Hurdle To Return to Good Standing

Manchester, N. H., March 21 — (AP) — Dr. Hermann N. Sander has a new hurdle to clear before he can return to good standing in New Hampshire's medical profession.

Dr. Lloyd L. Wells, secretary of the Hillsboro County Medical Society, disclosed Monday night that a charge had been filed with the county association against the young country doctor.

The State Board of Registration in Medicine already has a hearing pending to determine Dr. Sander's right to continue the practice of medicine. The hearing will be held April 15.

The disclosure that a charge had been filed with the county society came a few hours after two Roman Catholic hospitals announced Dr. Sander had been banned from practising in the institutions.

The 41-year-old physician was acquitted March 9 of murder in the death of Mrs. Ruth C. Boronto, 59, a cancer-ridden patient. The nature of the charge filed with County Society was not disclosed.

The county group's constitution provides that charges may be preferred "by reason of (1) criminal offence, (2) gross misconduct as a citizen or physician, or (3) violation of the society's by-laws."

The society's board of censors can recommend (1) Dr. Sander be reprimanded, (2) that he be exonerated of the charge, or (3) that he be expelled from the society.

The society does not have authority to revoke Dr. Sander's license. Only action held only by the State Board of Registration in Medicine.

The Catholic hospitals barring Dr. Sander are the Notre Dame and Sacred Heart, both in Manchester.

The ban, approved by Msgr. Matthew J. Ahern, Catholic Bishop of the Manchester Diocese, is "forever."

The Bishop attacked euthanasia (mercy killing) Sunday in a sermon. He did not mention the Sander case which promoted widespread discussion on the merit of euthanasia which is forbidden by the Catholic church.

Cancel Liner To Evacuate Nationals

Hong Kong, March 21. (AP)—The American President lines today cancelled the Liner Gen. W. H. Gordon's trip to evacuate foreign Nationals from Red-held Shanghai.

Chinese communist officials earlier refused entry into Shanghai harbor of two shallow draft vessels needed to carry evacuees through waters which may be mined.

A. J. Berryman, Hong Kong manager of A.P.L., said the door was left open for a last-minute agreement but he had little hopes.

The communists' refusal to let two civilian-manned tank landing ships enter Shanghai harbor stymied plans to evacuate more than 400 Americans and 1,200 Nationals of other countries.

The Reds' decision was made known only after the S.S.T.A. had cleared Nagasaki, Japan, bound for Shanghai.

Nationalists say they have mined the waters of the Whangpoo and Yangtze Rivers leading into Shanghai Harbor. The shallow draft L.S.T.s would need to lessen the danger of accident. They were scheduled to reach Shanghai tomorrow.

Fifteen foreign consulates in Shanghai delivered a formal protest meeting today. There was no immediate word whether they plan to present their arguments to Chinese Communist officials.

Persons familiar with Chinese communists tactics predicted the Reds might eventually back down. But such action, they conceded, likely would come—if at all—only after interminable delay.

The desire of large numbers of foreigners, including business men and diplomatic personnel, to leave Red China constitutes "loss of face" to the Communists.

They are also a valuable source of foreign exchange. And the Reds, who boast proudly and loudly of the fine new country they are building, obviously resent the fact that anyone wants to get out.

Injured Workman Brought by Sleigh, Plane, Car to Hospital

North Bay, March 21. (CP)—A sleigh, a plane and a car were used today in saving an injured lumber worker 37 miles to a North Bay hospital. He has three badly-mangled fingers, two of them being half off.

The injured man, Mac Marshall, 50, was starting up a motor in the veneer plant of Staniforth Lumber Company, at Kiosk, 37 miles east of here, this morning. His left hand was drawn into a pulley, the belt tearing off part of two fingers and mangling a third.

Lakeland Skyways at Trout Mills was notified through the Lands Department and a plane, piloted by Bob Callander, was dispatched at 9.15 a.m. to Kiosk.

Marshall was taken by sleigh from the lumber company's office to the plane. The plane landed here from Mills at 10.39 a.m. and the injured man was then rushed by car to the hospital.

BURNED SMOKING IN BED

Toronto, March 21. (CP)—Mary Kennedy, 52, burned while smoking in bed, died Monday night in hospital. Her death brought the Toronto weekend fire fatality list to three. Robert McKay, 78-year old pensioner and Mrs. Lindsay Nowell-Morton, also died of burns.

Cardy's Counsel Opposes Stiff Fine Proposed

Montreal, March 21 — (CP)— Vernon G. Cardy, retired hotel magnate and horse owner awaiting sentence for violations of foreign control board regulations involving $200,000, was compared in criminal court Monday to the late Sir Thomas Lipton for his ability to develop publicity.

The comparison was made by Arthur Joseph Lallemend, head by the International Publishing Company, who said that, while Sir Thomas publicized England through his yachting ventures, Cardy did the same with the success of his horse shows in Canada and the United States.

"Such publicity, if paid for in U. S. dollars," he told Judge Gerald Almond, "would have cost at least $20 a printed line."

He added that newspaper-publicity which appeared about automatically in the form of news, is the most valuable.

The hearing was held Monday, with the consent of the Crown, so the defence counsel could move Noel to make representations to the court on behalf of Cardy before sentence is pronounced Friday. Defence has opposed a fine, Crown request the $100,000 fine and a jail sentence.

Cardy pleaded guilty March 10 to the charges for which the maximum penalty is double the amounts involved plus 12 months in jail.

Communist-Led Confederation Calls Strike

Rome, March 21 (Reuters) — Italy's giant communist-led general labor confederation today called a country-wide general strike to protest against new government police measures.

The confederation's executive instructed its secretariat to decide on the date and the duration of the strike.

The Confederation — which claims 5,200,000 members — met today following the announcement of measures by Interior Minister Mario Scelba during the week.

The "free" (non-communist) General Labor Confederation, affiliated with Christian Democrat government, has declared that its 1,000,000 members will not support the communist-led confederation "supervision."

The communist-led Italian labor union has discussed the Scoelba measures.

The government orders revised a law previously applied — forbidding meetings in factories without the statement's consent. They also empowered provincial prefects to forbid public meetings or demonstrations to trouble areas.

Workers in northern Industrial towns have already staged a series of lightning strikes and public demonstrations resulting in clashes between workers and police.

Government spokesmen explained that the new measures were needed to combat growing disorder throughout Italy.

$156,937.55 Awarded Injured Teacher

Los Angeles, March 21. (AP)—Clara Dawson, 60, schoolteacher Monday was awarded $156,937.55 for injuries suffered May 11, 1948. She had helped one of her pupils board a streetcar when a bus and a streetcar collided and pushed another student to safety, then was struck by the bus. Doctors said she would never be able to work again.

Dr. Sander's Counsel Opposes Stiff Fine Proposed

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, March 21 — (CP) — Plans for extending the means by which telephone users can see facsimile newspapers brought into the home by radio, plans looking off and landing without the pilot's hands at the controls. . .

Most of these developments in the field of communications are possible right now, says Cmdr. C. P. Edwards, Deputy Minister of Air in the Transport Department. Almost certainly, they will be in use by the end of the 20th century.

Discussing in an interview the probable developments in the field in which he is an authority, Cmdr. Edwards foresaw the day when advances in the use of radio aids to navigation will greatly reduce or eliminate the number of accidents due to poor visibility in the air, on the ground or at sea.

He expects facsimile—the mechanical reproduction of writing, printing or pictures—will be used to print or to supplement telegraph communications to a large extent. Radio Is Help for Blind Men

He foresees the day when facsimile radio sets will bring printed newspapers into the home and telephone-television making it possible to see as well as hear a person during a telephone conversation.

Telephone-television is technically possible now. Through the use of screens, cables and other special equipment, it is possible for person to see another during a telephone conversation. But the cost of the service is such that it is not being placed on the market at present.

Cmdr. Edwards said in an interview that development of modern wire-coast navigation facilities will be a boon to the spread of television to rural areas.

He added:

"The technical problems of setting up a television program network have already been solved.

Telephone-Television Will be In Extensive Use by Century End

Circuits Will Increase

"There is little doubt that in the years to come, the number and capacity of these (relay) communications circuits will increase greatly, with a corresponding reduction in the cost per channel. this in turn should give a great impetus to the whole field of television.

He thinks that the transmission of newspapers through facsimile radio is being held up by administrative problems and costs. One problem: Who will pay for the newspaper brought into the home by radio?

Facsimile equipment can rapidly transmit a page or print by radio or landline. Special receivers would be required in the home.

Recently invented in the United States is a system—called ultrafax—that can transmit the contents of a book in a matter of minutes. This is done by photographing the pages on movie film and transmitting the film over a regular television system. It may come into wide use in the years ahead. Perfect Radio Aids

Scientists are perfecting radio aids that will enable an airplane to take off, fly and land in a distant city without human intervention.

A Canadian invention enables a plane pilot to land now far he is from an airport.

Cmdr. Edwards says there is vital need for a radar device that will enable a pilot or ship owner to identify the craft showing on his radar screen. This is one of the developments he expects in the years ahead.

"We can expect that the use of radio communications in other fields will grow apace steadily," he says, "particularly as new equipment is developed to operate at higher and higher radio frequencies, thereby making available much more and more spectrum space for new and expanded services."

US Gold Holdings Have Declined Over 370 Millions

Washington, Mar. 21—(AP)—Gold holdings of the United States government have declined more than $370,000,000 in six months since the foreign currency devaluations last September.

Officials here expressed belief today that the chief cause for the withdrawals has been improvement in the balance of international accounts. This they said is taking the pressure off foreign countries to send gold here to pay for goods and enable them to rebuild reserves drained from the U.S.

The decline in the gold stock since it reached the peak of $24,-690,998,991 last August 31 was cancelled out its rise in six months preceding the devaluations.

Treasury records show the U.S. government's holding—still about three-fifths of the whole world's stock of gold for monetary uses—is down by $21,329,000,000, about the same as at this point last year.

Before the devaluations, gold had been pouring in from foreign countries in huge shipments, principally except in wartime, since the U.S. devalued the dollar on a gold basis in January 1934.

Commerce department experts calculate that as a result of these actions with the U.S. in 1949, gaining gold and dollar assets combined amounted to:

$360,000,000 for Latin America with its heavy dollar earnings.

$70,000,000 for Canada (which got another $45,000,000 in reserves from its newlymined gold); and

The British moved some gold—$140,000,000 worth of it—to the U.S. in 1949, practically all before the devaluation.

Studies Civic Taxes On Hydro And Liquor Stores

Toronto, March 21 — (CP) — Mayor Hiram McCallum said today he will look into the possibility of imposing full civic taxes on the Ontario and Toronto Hydro Commissions and on provincial liquor stores.

He said the city of Ottawa collects full municipal taxes from the school tax, from the Ottawa Hydro System and he added:

"If Ottawa can do it, there is no reason why the Toronto Hydro can't do likewise."

At present, the Toronto Hydro pays full taxes on land but not on its buildings. It pays property and business taxes on retail stores and full taxes on Hydro-owned lands not used for Hydro purposes but does not pay school taxes. Last year the Toronto system contributed $182,078 in taxes to the city treasury.

Emergency Housing Centre Threatened

Toronto, March 21.(CP)—The Emergency Housing Centre in suburban Lakeview was reported threatened today as fire swept through the temporary army camp.

Neighbors Raise $250 to Assist Injured Man

Picton—Demonstrating the true spirit of good neighbors, a group of friends canvassed the rural area of Greenbush, just west of Picton and raised the sum of $250. This was presented to Alex Lack who had the misfortune to fall from a barn roof two weeks ago. He suffered a broken heel. Removed to a Toronto hospital, an operation was performed and one or more will be necessary.

KILBORN TRIAL

Says Kilborn Was Calm

The jury was told that Kilborn was highly-respected in the Bailieboro community.

Kilborn smiled at photographers whom he met during his walk from the county jail to the courthouse today and wished them "Good morning."

Chosen for the all-male petit jury were a farmer, a retired businessmith, a foreman and two laborers.

Crown Attorney Harry Deyman outlined the case at the opening of the trial.

Justice Dalton Wells is presiding.

Mrs. Viola Barnard, whose husband's farm is near the Kilborn home, was the first witness to testified to his wife. Starting in July, 1949, Mrs. Kilbon's condition had become worse.

Became More Despondent

"She cried a great deal and became more despondent. She had an involuntary twitching of her arms. In a visit before she died, she was at our home and she appeared extremely nervous," the witness said.

(Testimony at Kilbon's preliminary hearing was that plans had been made for Mrs. Kilbon to be admitted to the Ontario Hospital at Whitby for treatment of her mental disorder.)

"On the morning of Nov. 1," said Mrs. Barnard, "Mr. Kilbon phoned and asked if Charlie (Mr. Barnard) would hurry over. His voice was much the same as it always was. I went to the barn and gave my husband the message."

Mrs. Barnard said in cross examination that Kilbon's reputation in the Bailieboro community was "of the highest." He prepared the meals and was attentive and kind to Mrs. Kilbon, the witness said. He had purchased the big farmhouse in the hope that the atmosphere would help her.

PACE ON THE HIGHWAYS AND ROADS

How man has increased the pace of road travel tenfold from the eight-miles-an-hour of the trotting horse to the all-too-frequent 80-miles-an-hour of his automobile and as he accelerates "death and injury also accelerate in geometric progression" is pointed out in a booklet, publish-ed by the All-Canada Insurance Federation and having the title, "Death Is So Permanent," after a sign on a highway in one of the states of the American Union.

In it is expressed the view "there is not — and never will be a safe motor highway" because "engineering ad-vances in the design and speed when combined with the increased number of vehicles on the road have brought a rapid increase in accidents and the inevitable increase in property damage, injuries and fatalities, despite the mark-ed advance in modern highway construction."

The statement is here made that these tragedies result because man has allowed his body to outstrip his mind. His mental processes — particularly those affecting his judgment — fail to keep pace with his increased and still increasing desire for speed."

J. P. Bickell, Ontario Registrar of Motor Vehicles, is quoted as saying that excessive speed for the existing con-ditions is the prime cause of most accidents and fatalities and that the law and common sense both declare that motorists must drive safely at all times.

Latest figures are noted to show that more than ten per cent of the motorists were involved in fatal acci-dents were driving on the wrong side of the road while on rural highways, about thirteen out of every one hundred fatal accidents occurred when passing another car.

As accidents go up so do the insurance rates, so that every accident is in reality a tax on every car-driver since the rates are based on losses.

A statement which ought to be pondered over a great deal is this "Accidents don't happen — they are committed. Prevention is the only cure." Obedience of the laws and reg-ulations and careful and courteous driving are necessities if the accidents are to be kept down.

RESEARCH WITH ISOTOPES

The Atomic Energy Commission will spend $300,000 this year and $350,000 next year in connection with the treatment of cancer with the use of radioactive isotopes. It is expected that this will bring increased interest and development of the war against cancer.

It is stated by the New York Times that the isotopes are now being produced in "furnaces" or "reactors" in an amount that makes the cost so low that there will be in-tensification and broadening of the work of cancer research.

Selected patients who need treatment will be transported to one of the centres at the expense of the United States Government. The Times says that there is no difficulty in finding sufferers from cancer in any community but there is often difficulty in finding sufferers from cancers of special types.

The Times notes that "it usually happens that re-search scientists, who work with the same material for the same purpose soon follow new leads which have been opened. What lead is considered the most promising rests with the individual scientist. As a result research is expect-ed to branch out in new directions and with the aim of achieving new purposes.

What will be the result of this concentration of effort on the cancer problem? The Times says that "no one would be so bold as to predict that of the research to be conducted with radioactive isotopes a cure for cancer will be found. Yet the fact remains that irradiation and surgery are still the preferred methods of treating most cancers. It would be a great advantage if more effective means of irradiating cancers came out of the project."

So the work of research goes on with amazing concen-tration on this ancient and very modern disease which re-mains one of the fears of the people of the whole world.

Queen Mary's carpet which is soon to be shown in Canada and the United States, is the work of the leisure time of the Queen-Mother over a long space of years. In Britain the carpet attracted much attention and will be greatly admired in the New World.

WISE GARDENER

Time was the warm ascending
So much I wanted flowers to
To sniff.
Found me with gardening
With haste to plant, to death begun.
In March I'd dig the frozen
I'd doom
clay
the marigold and
Believing spring had come to mignonette
stay.
Because the ground was cold
Though wiser neighbors used and wet.
to sniff,
But now I let the roses
The winter dressing I'd take sleep off
Beneath the covers warm and
And leave the roses, white and deep,
red,
I've learned my lesson, and Unblanketed to freeze in delay bed.
All gardening 'til early
May.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

LOOKING BACKWARDS

20 YEARS AGO

March 21st., 1930

Mrs. M. Woodcock and sons, Maurice and Harry, of Deseronto, are visiting friends here.

Mr. G. M. Campbell of Deseronto was in town today.

Judge J. E. Madden of Napanee was in town over the week-end.

Miss Lucy Ford, formerly of this city, is visiting friends here.

30 YEARS AGO

March 21st., 1920

Shortly before two o'clock this afternoon a telephone message was received advising city officials that a large ice field, which had jammed in the river above Lazier's mill, had broken away and was sweeping towards the city. When this fact reached the ice which was piled up above the footbridge, it set it in motion with irresistible force it rushed on towards the bay. At the railway bridge the ice piled up to such an ex-tent that it not only went to the top of the piers, but rested against the iron work. Here it was securely held and it looks as though it will stay there for some time. No serious damage has resulted so far. The foot-bridge, as usual, came in for some damage and the only access to the footbridge is impass-able. There is some water on Front Street, below the Queen's Hotel.

40 YEARS AGO

T. R. and the C. N. R. sta-tion may be built this summer.

Messrs. Mowbray and Dor-land Anderson left today for California.

City Engineer Lindsay has been appointed assessor of the city along with his other du-ties, until a permanent assess-sor is appointed. He will re-ceive no extra pay for this ad-ditional work.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

FREEDOM

Nothing in this world is so precious as Freedom. We, in this western world, have lost it. I fear that we take it too much for granted. The preservation is our greatest trust, for without it we can be but abject slaves.

On my way to work I often stop at a store where there is a great variety of cages with beautiful birds in them. These birds contin-uously flit from perch to perch, back and forth all day long. Their enslavement gives my wrath. Some of them sing, but I prefer it if not a happy song, rather a plain-tive one, from a bleeding heart. I recall the cry of a nightingale, thus caged, in a southern city its voice could be heard a block away, and when I stood before it, sad-dened, almost to tears I still hear that cruel cage in it.

Cruel as it is to cage beautiful birds, it is a thousand times worse to cage human beings, to deprive them of life, liberty and the pur-suit of happiness." How anyone in this free land of ours can traffic-ously seek to sow the seeds of slavery in our midst is beyond my comprehension.

In my newspaper I recently read of a D.P. who visited with an acquaintance in New Jersey, and who inquired how she was to get a passport from New York to that other state! How surprised she was to learn she learned she could go into any state in the United States without a passport.

There can be no permanent peace, nor good will among men, in this world so long as there is not universal freedom. It is for this that we have sacrificed and been dedicated, and for which each of us should be "fast full measure of devotion."

If we are for the freedom of the press that Lovejoy died, and for which many another has gravely suffered, and for religion we must endure that does not give to its people full freedom of the right to worship in their own way ac-cording to the dictates of their conscience. Freedom is an inher-ited right too sacred ever to be surrendered.

ONLY ONE SURE CURE

Most of us in this country are agreed that communism is an un-mitigated curse. It pretends to make all men equal, in reality it raises up a few tyrannical lead-ers and puts the rest of humanity on a plane of equality by making and keeping them all poor.

But in our thinking about communism we sometimes con-clude that communism is the cause of trouble in a country when, as a matter of fact, it is the result of trouble in a country. If people have no work or no food the promises of communism seem very alluring. Here in America communism is the cause of trouble, but there are many pla-ces in the world where people are so poverty-stricken and so hungry that communism seems relief of outrageous conditions of human misery.

The best way to fight commu-nism is to give everybody in the world a fair chance to live a safe and honest life which offers op-portunities for advancement and reward. Remove those opportuni-ties make slaves of men, and they will welcome communism and its promises of amelioration.

Communism is a disease, and social justice and applied Chris-tianity are the specifics guaran-teed to destroy this disease as it courses through the blood stream of human life.

Father of Girl Quadruplets Says Adoption Possible

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., March 21 (CP)—Happily unaware of the financial boon in store, the Hargreaves girl quadruplets con-tinued to receive loving care today.

The five-months-old babies — Jennifer Ann, Joyce Barbara, Joyce Carol and Joan Eleanor — continue their normal way as healthy, lusty, wide-kicking babies while their father worried-ly said he might have to consid-er offering them for adoption.

At first, C. E. (Ossie) Hargreav-es said there was no question of offering the babies for adoption. But Monday night he declared: "the situation is becoming critic-al and we may have to consider the possibility of offering the four girls for adoption."

Efforts on behalf of the family have fallen short of requirements since the quads, first in the Sault, were born Nov. 28. So far, they have been informed by the Sault Ste. Marie Children's Aid Com-mittee that there is only $5,000 allotted to the building of a home for the babies. He added, "we don't feel that I can go out and make a start on a home with that kind of money."

But the house-building fund was the least of the worries. "I might now that I'm worried about," he said.

The committee had suggested that he could do without a house-keeper, he said. That seemed rash, and that if things got too bad he would probably be assisted then. He said both these suggestions were impracticable.

Praises Committee

"Price of milk," he said Monday night, "how can Mrs. Hargreaves look after the four of them at once is beyond me. Other times I am sending a home large enough to accommodate my family on $80 a month, a very reasonable rate."

He praised the work of the fund committee in "getting us off to the right start" in the days the first of the year, he added, "the public has taken a great interest in the welfare of the girls and I am afraid they have been deluged by gifts of clothing."

Local service clubs undertook to pay nurses' wages for babies dur-ing the first of 1949, with the guar-antee of the provincial govern-ment. They paid for the nursing services during January. Cash has even been left in the hands of the parents.

The local campaign to raise funds for the youngsters' future, including material and labor to build a new home, reached its height a month after the girls were born. A number of promises of help from labor and industry are still forthcoming. But there has been few money donations since Christmas.

Union War Shaping up In Vancouver

Vancouver, March 21—(CP)—A union war involving 1,400 sea-men is shaping up here.

Threat of violence loomed when Dick Acton, shipping agent for the Seafarers' International Union of Canada, said the S.I.U. already has begun action to replace the West Coast crews with Easterners.

Action of the S.I.U., he said, fol-lowed a Canada Labor Relations Board ruling that the union was no longer recognized "as a union at all."

James Thompson, port agent for the W.C.S.U., said the ruling did not mean the union would make, but said:

"We have contracts with British Columbia operators running through to October, 1950."

Shipping officials said they foresaw a recurrence of the vi-olence which swept the water-front when the same two unions came to blows in 1946 and 1947. They said they had not yet been approached for help.

S.I.U. announced its intention to take over bargaining rights from the W.C.S.U. when it rep-resentations of more than 600 W.C.S.U. seamen, mostly on deep-sea ships.

At Ottawa a labor department spokesman said he had no in-formation on any move by the Seafarer's International Union of Canada to get bargaining rights from the West Coast Seamen's Union.

The spokesman said the S.I.U. is lacking certification by the Labor Relations Board and cannot invoke the Labor Act to force employers to bargain. Under the Act employ-ers are required to bargain with a certified union.

SEAS, WINDS DELAY LINERS

New York, March 21 — (AP) — Rough seas and high winds on the Atlantic have disrupted schedules of at least eight ocean liners plying toward New York. The ships, carrying more than 4,500 passengers, have radioed their officers that they will be from one to three days late.

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

When a famous Detroit hotel opened a much much fanfare, I was among those who were first day guests. And when I walked into my luxurious room I was to discover that, in the mirror over the basin, I could see only the top of my head.

This was largely due, of course, to the fact that the mirror is barely five foot three, even in the fancy array type hotels I affect, with heavy soles and thick heels.

In great indignation, I put a complaint through to the man-ager. Not the reception desk clerk. Not the assistant manager sitting so pretty at his desk in the lobby. No. The manager of the hotel, by thunder! And despite his harrass-ed condition on this the opening day, I was put through to him.

"This is most urgent!" I inform-ed him. "Please come to my room at once, with two dictionaries, one short and one of fairly good American hotel guides."

He doubtless thought I was crazy. But in the hotel business, especially on the opening day of a great canvassery, the customer is always right. So in a few minutes he was at my door, accompanied by a bell boy bearing the large dictionaries and a big fat red hotel guide book. I led them into the bathroom.

I stood before the mirror facing them.

The tall distinguished manager looked at me perplexedly.

"Put those books on the floor," I directed the bell hop, "in a neat pile."

He did so, I stepped on top of the pile.

"Now," I announced, "I can see myself."

The poor manager nearly went crazy himself. He rushed away to get the work in hand instantly. I learned later that they shut off a whole floor for a day, to get the mirrors lowered on at least one floor. But one of them could accommodate the small people with-out humiliating them.

Mackenzie's Column: Mayor O'Dwyer Says Sir Basil Won't be Welcome

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press, News Analyst)

Sure and it's straight talk that Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York has aimed at Prime Minis-ter Sir Basil Brooke of North-ern Ireland because Sir Basil's government banned St. Patrick's Day celebrations.

O'Dwyer, who originally hailed from Bohola, County Mayo, Ire-land, and therefore is a real son of the old sod, has announced that Sir Basil won't be welcomed at New York City Hall on the latter's forthcoming visit to the United States.

But what O'Dwyer had to say was mild compared with the tide of bitterness which ebbs and flows daily between the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ire-land. It is one of the most emotional issues in America. Prime Min-ister John M. Costello of Ireland has spoken his mind on the ban on St. Patrick's Day when he de-clared:

"With all our history behind us, and with an unshakeable re-liance we shall never forget about the partition of our country until that partition is undone."

I have studied the quarrel be-tween the two states from all angles, political, economic, reli-gious and racial. Nothing could make me change my mind about a report something concrete to give hope of settlement, but only aggravate it.

I probably have told in some previous dispatch how on one visit I had with the late Lord Craig-avon, for many years Prime Min-ister of Northern Ireland, Punc-tuating his exclamations by slam-ming his hand down on the arm-chair of his other hand, he boom-ed:

"Ulster will never be ruled from Dublin! Never! Never! And when I die I'll be buried in Ulster and will take up the leadership after me."

As already indicated, there are several angles to the quarrel be-sides the religious issue in Ire-land. One is religion— due to the fact that Northern Ireland is largely Protestant, while the south is Catholic.

Economic matters in, because wealthy Ulster with its profitable industries maintains that she has the best and most unfair proportion of taxation if there were a un-ited Ireland.

Politically, Northern Ireland adheres to Britain's Commonwealth despite the feelings of Southern Ireland for England— bred in the bone by centuries of persecutions of Irishmen—remains bitter.

DRUG ADDICTION

Marijuana, I believe, has been pictured in the press as a cause of juvenile delinquency. It has been pictured as the cause of alcoholism addiction and mental and moral breakdown of thousands of young people. The drug is derived from a weed which can grow most anyw-here and from which cigarettes are made, called "reefers," or "muggles".

The effect a first-time smoker of marijuana can expect is simil-ar to that of a first-time smoker of tobacco—nausea and headache. Before the stage of smoking de-velops, there may result a few moments of unrealistic "floating" which is the effect sought for by the young addicts.

The effect of marijuana—once the early symptoms of nausea and headache are disposed of—is a re-peated experience— is to distort judgment and repress inhibitions. Under the influence of the drug the smoker can lose himself en-tirely in exploits far beyond his actual physical capacity. However, a physical incapacity soon develops, there may result a few moments of unrealistic "floating" which is the effect sought for by the young addicts.

Many sedative drugs, listed as "habit-forming", such as the bar-biturates, owe their attractive-ness to the calming influence they exert on emotional disturbances. As patients they are very suscep-tible. "Cure" of this type of addi-tion is entirely possible, although the most wanton misuse of these drugs is involved in the habit of taking them for the purpose of in-ducing sleep. This is a sensel-ess health-harmful habit indulged in by thousands of unthinking people.

Threshermen, Power Farmers Hold Convention in City, G.F. McInroy, Stirling, Pres.

Meeting in Belleville for the first time since the inauguration of their organization 24 years ago, members of the Eastern Ontario Brotherhood of Threshermen and Power Farmers held their annual convention in the city on Monday.

Convention sessions were held at the Club-Vanity Fair, the meeting being concluded with an evening banquet held in Bridge Street United Church Sunday School rooms, when Rev. A. M. Laverty, Queen's University, was the guest speaker.

Goldie F. McInroy, R.R. 2 Stirling, was re-elected president of the Association for another term. Fred Robinson, Corbyville was moved up to 1st vice president, and James Barber, R.R. 7, Belleville, was named 2nd vice president. Secretary-treasurer is Vincent Farrell, Stirling.

Directors are Ed. Dunn, Cameron; Chas. Mills, Tamworth; W. W. Dawson, Peterborough, R.R. 7; Robt. Mahaffy, Peterborough and James Reynolds, Foxboro.

Greetings Brought

Greetings from the Western Ontario branch of the Association were brought by George Lands. One of the drawbacks of present day farmers was that they tried too much to get along by themselves. He said that convention sessions were worthwhile in that they enabled farmers to get the other fellow's viewpoint.

Byrell Harris, Chatham, president of the Threshermen's Mutual Fire Insurance Company, reported the company had a good surplus and had done more business last year than ever before. He cited the early history of the Association, noting that its formation was primarily to educate its members to enable them to comply with highway and other regulations.

Mr. H. Etching, assistant professor of engineering at the O.A.C. Guelph, addressed the meeting on good tractor operating practices, stating that farmers generally had failed to realize the extent of the tractor's development in the past twenty years. It was now a precision instrument demadding correct maintenance and operation of top efficiency was to be expected.

In the past 20 years the power of an equivalent tractor had been doubled and used but 75 per cent of the gasoline used by its predecessor. But that efficiency could drop off sharply unless proper maintenance was given.

Properly Warm Tractor

Noting that 75 per cent of the wear on a tractor took place in the first five minutes after starting, the speaker urged that a tractor not be put under load until properly warmed. Modern tractors were designed to run hot and were not efficient if they were operated cool. Cool operation meant less power and more fuel.

Operation of the tractor at its rated engine speed was also important. Engine timing, carburetion, cooling and ignition could be expected to work at top efficiency only if the tractor engine was operated at its rated speed.

Under Traffic Act

Corporal John Morden, Ontario Provincial Police, addressed the meeting on rules and regulations of operating tractors and other farm machinery on the highways. He noted that through a recent amendment to the H.T.A. a tractor was now a "motor vehicle" and thus came under the provisions of the Highway Traffic Act.

He stressed that proper lamps and reflectors are used on tractors and other farm equipment when being operated on the highways and said it was important that at all times one half of the higway be left free.

Kenneth Falls of the Crop, Seeds and Weeds branch, showed slides taken at Canada's first farm conservation day held at Brooklin last September.

GIRAFFE'S OTHER NAME

Giraffes were also known as camelopards — a name probably given when they were first introduced into Roman amphitheatres from Africa.

British Actress Is Film Veteran Though Only 21

By MURIEL NARRAWAY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London,— (CP) — Dark-haired Jean Simmons, most promising young star in the British film firmament, celebrated her 21st birthday recently with a big party in the Odeon Theatre at Leicester Square.

There was a seven-foot cake. There was champagne. The press was there in force and so were scores of film people. After almost two hours of posing for the press, smiling and greeting her guests, Jean crept out on the stairs and cried.

She was just plain tuckered out after a hard week at the studios. She had been up at 5 a.m. to work at Pinewood Studios and had already celebrated her birthday at an afternoon tea party with her boss, J. Arthur Rank, and his top executives.

Her birthday present from the Rank organization was an increase in salary to £60 ($168.00) a week per year.

Jean left the Odeon publicity party to celebrate with actor Stewart Granger. Made a surprise visit to the 21 Club Restaurant in Soho. Jean wore her favorite oyster-satin brocade evening gown. Supper was smoked salmon, chicken, lettuce salad and crepes suzettes followed by coffee and champagne.

Jean has come a long way from the 13-year-old who first faced film audiences in "Give Us This" and "Life Line."

Her first film "success" was "The Way To The Stars," a story of Battle of Britain days. She then on Jean headed for the top, playing the young Estella in "Great Expectations;" the sultry island beauty in "Blue Lagoon;" the Indian girl in "Black Narcissus;" Ophelia in "Hamlet."

Still Learning

Her first grown-up non-costume part was in "Adam and Evelyne" Granger in "Adam and Evelyne" to talk about her work. Jean says:

"Making films is thrilling. I enjoy the actual moment of it though I realize I've still got a long way to go. I'm learning something new every day, particularly from experienced actresses like Celia Johnson and Margaret Lockwood."

Asked about her performance in Hamlet, Jean said she nearly passed out when Sir Laurence Olivier suggested testing for for the part.

At 21 Jean has a new sophistication and confidence. She drives her fast sports car to the studio and has her own flat off Oxford Street. She is fond of clothes, dancing, parties and fun, but when she is working on a film she is in bed each night at nine.

On the question of romance she says:

"It's all become a bit of a farce. I'm too interested in work to be serious about anyone."

"I have resolved not to marry till I'm 25—then I may not stick to that resolution."

Believes Congress Will Reject Move To Substitute

Washington, Mar. 21—(AP)—Senator Tom Connally (Dem. Tex.) predicted today that Congress will reject a move to substitute $1,000,000,000 worth of surplus United States farm products for cash in the European recovery program.

The House of Representatives Foreign Affairs Committee voted the shift from money to farm products Monday in the fact of strong protests from the Truman administration.

"The economic co-operation administration has asked a $2,500,000,000 authorization plus the right to spend $150,000,000 which will be left over from the current year.

The farm products-for-cash amendment in House Committee came from representative John Vorys (Rep. O.).

Vorys said that in the past the Secretary of Agriculture "has furnished only $115,000,000 of government surpluses out of a total E.C.A. food program costing more than $2,400,000,000.

"There is no excuse now for using new funds to buy more agricultural products for a government program, when we already own and have paid for this gigantic surplus," he said.

Chairman John Keen (Dem. W. Va.) who opposed Vory's proposal said in his opinion the bill "doesn't save anything."

In the first place, Keen contended, it puts an added burden on the farm price-support program by taking $1,000,000,000 worth of E.C.A. purchasing power out of the open market. He said it also ties the hands of the E.C.A.

E.C.A. officials also are opposing the move. They argue it would support communism's claims that Europe is being used as a dumping ground for American surplus farm production and would hamper recovery efforts.

HAS HELPFUL HUSBAND

"Not everyone's husband is a chemist, so I pass on what Ed told me when my wash looked dingy and yellow. "Blue is one of the seven colours that combine to make white," he said. "Without blue there is no pure white." Now I just swish Reckitt's Blue in the final rinse for a wash that's snowy white every time. Out of the blue comes the whitest wash. And with Reckitt's Blue I avoid any danger from chemicals that may damage fabrics."

The reports of the standing committees were all ably given and Mrs. Patterson read several items of interest for current events.

The president recalled that this branch of the institute was organized one year ago, and said it had been suggested that the officers and conveners of standing committees remain in office for another year. A motion to this effect was passed with an exception being the convener of Public Relations. Mrs. Carl Thompson was elected to replace Miss Muriel Homan who is not at home at present. The highlight of the afternoon's program was an address by Mrs. William Tufts. She also gave a most interesting account of a recent six-week trip to Florida as a member of a congenial party, travelling by car, and trailer.

She carried the interest of her listeners with her, naming Ivy Lea Bridge through many states to Florida, and across the islands, by the connecting bridges to Key West, telling of the different soils and the variety of crops grown as one went from state to state.

They went through coal mining country and towns and visiting historic landmarks and many cities from Harrisburg and Gettysburg to Savannah, Georgia which is called the cities of Eleanor, Jacksonville, St. Augustine, the oldest city in America, Tampa, Sarasota, the winter home of the Ringling Bros. and Miama.

They visited Silver Springs which ranks with Niagara Falls and the Grand Canyon as one of the three wonders of U.S.A. They made their home at Bradenton on the gulf of Mexico, a city of 12,000 trailers with its own post office, and city services.

The tropical fruit, and the trees and masses of flowers everywhere were a source of much interest. She returned to her home here by way of visiting Washington, D.C., en route. Many lovely colored pictures and post cards were displayed and helped to illustrate the talk.

Mrs. Brintnell thanked Mrs. Tufts for her interesting address and a social time followed.

It is hard to let out the seams of our thinking for there are the barriers of language and custom. During the war we felt that nothing was too great an effort for the achievement of world peace. Learning about other peoples and Christianizing the world tends now to understanding. Patriotism is not enough, God's Kingdom is greater."

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEO. H. CARVER, Sports Editor

In the not too distant future proud yachts may be heeded over before a spanking breeze, their white wings flicked of the weather by their glider over Bay of Quinte waters west of the bay bridge. At the same time in a modern well-appointed club house members may be viewing the facilities of an club house members may be viewing the facilities of an up-to-date club house materials, will be facilities structure-to-be if present plans materialize, will be facilities for badminton, volley ball, basketball and other indoor recreation, as well as out-door tennis courts.

This is not a dream, envisioned by a group of mental wanderers, but what is hoped will be a reality by recreation minded young people of the city. Steps have already been taken to secure a well-known property located near the western precincts of the city in proximity to the shores of the bay.

The new organization will be known as the Belleville Racquet Club, and present plans call for the construction of a modern club house which will be used as a Youth Centre. Behind the movement are such well known city sports luminaries as Malcolm Robb, Tommy Carruthers, Les Pearard, Roland Pryke, Jack Sills, Chris Lockyer, Bill McBride, Harold Mott, Marion Salsbury, Thelma Finlayson, Grace Boyer, Edra McCreary and many others.

Badminton has grown in popularity by leaps and bounds during the past few years. But facilities at the armouries were limited and a number of players were unable to play as often as they would have liked. With interest being shown in volleyball, tennis, and especially yachting among the younger set of the city, the idea of a club to house facilities of all these sports was born. It "took on" immediately, and present indications point to the reception of solid support from all parts of the city and people. As was said before, the accent will be on youth and family activities.

The Racquet Club, naturally will be in operation the year round. Present plans call for six badminton courts, a basketball court, and arrangements for other sports mentioned. An extensive yachting program will be entertained for summer activities, while the club as a whole will be utilized for youth activities.

Financing of the new structure has started. Certificates of membership may be obtained from Roland Pryke, 24 Dunbar Street. The proposed Racquet Club should fill a long-felt want in the city, as it will give those boys and girls whose ideas of recreation are embodied in the athletic sports program a chance to indulge in their favorite recreation. Baseball, softball and hockey-minded youngsters of the city have their "innings" so to speak, but the newly-proposed Racquet Club will provide pastime for those who like their exercise and recreation along the lines proposed by the organization.

But while the accent will be on youth as was said before, the club membership will not be restricted to teenagers. That is not the idea. Any person who likes court sports and yachting is eligible to join. However the need at the moment is membership. Anybody interested in the venture is urged to get in touch with Mr. Pryke or any of the committee named in a preceding paragraph. It is reported the venture has already taken large steps along organization lines, and with the help of the interested public, it is hoped to reach some stage of solid foundation in the near future.

Montreal, March 21 (CP)— Is Montreal becoming a rival New York as the boxing centre of the world?

Incredible as it may seem, fight interest in the Canadian metropolis has picked up to such an extent recently that this claim on the part of Montreal fight addicts is not without merit.

Dink (Montreal Gazette) Carroll even suggests calling the Palestra National gymnasium "Little Stillman's" because so many fighters now work out there every day. They draw capacity crowds to watch them perform too.

Lending weight to Montreal's claim as a "big time" town as far as fighting goes, is the battle between the highly-rated French middleweight, Robert Villemain and Kid Gavilan, the Cuban welterweight flash. Percentages along Jacobs Beach in New York have insisted right along that this bout "belongs in the Garden."

But as Dink points out, "the match rightfully belongs where it will draw the most money and everyone concerned with it must feel that it will profit as much or more here than in New York.

Promoter Raoul Constant has insisted that the encounter that will probably set a new indoor attendance record for Canada. He insists that a battle between Villemain and Steve Belloise, fancy middleweight contender, or welterweight king Sugar Ray Robinson at the Montreal baseball park this summer would out draw any city, including New York. *

Ex Racers Through

The recent slump of the National Hockey League New York Rangers has experts wondering if the gothamites are through as a playoff time nears. But Ranger coach Lynn Patrick isn't worrying.

Dink Quotes Lynn as saying:

"Two weeks ago most of the other clubs wanted to meet us in the first round of the playoffs. Now they all want a crack at us. But I'd rather have this slump come when it did than when the playoffs start. I think we'll snap out of it before then."

Canada Clashes With Britain In Crucial Game

By MICHAEL O'MARA
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 21 (CP) —Canada, favored to win the world hockey tournament tonight clashes with Britain, the public choice for European honors, in what may well be the best game of the current world hockey tournament.

The match is vital both to the British squad and to Edmonton Mercurys, representing the Dominion. For the Mercurys, a victory would virtually ensure their donning the mantle of victory in the world event. For Britain, a triumph — although it doesn't seem to be in the cards— would give her a tight grip on the minor crown and restore her to mathematical running for the world laurels.

The European crown goes to the European champion at Harringay in the final world tournament standing.

The injury-riddled British squad now is in a three-way second-place tie with Switzerland and the United States in the final-round standings. All three have four points, compared with Canada's six. Switzerland and the Americans clash in today's second final-round game while winless Norway and Sweden come together in the third.

The Canadians enter tonight's Harringay arena contest unmarked by five previous tournament games—all victories— but Britain's club is battered and coach Lou Bates of Ottawa is crunching crying towels at a rapid rate.

Two of his best forwards are on the limp, and the team took a further pummelling Monday night, losing 3-2 to the United States in a battle of attrition that undoubtedly softened up the losers.

The Canadian players watched the furious game, which was four-fifths over for one knockdown fight and tempers a-plenty. The Merks wents to the British-American tussle after having knocked off Norway 11-1 in an effortless afternoon encounter. Switzerland defeated Sweden 3-2 in the day's other final-round game.

The feeling in the Canadian camp is that the Britons will be suckers for a fast-passing game and not as tough as they've been rated."

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, March 21 (AP)— Oddest oddity reported in the 1950 Baseball Guide: Ted Williams was an "inside the glove" homer scored by the Cardinals' Rocky Nelson while Johnny Pesky of the Cubs, still holding the ball ran in to register a beef with the ump . . . gossip around the boxing seats is that negotiations are under way for a Louis-Joey Maxim scrap next spring— Ezzard Charles, Lee Savold and Louis left if he does well enough . . . The Clemson and South Carolina football teams, which set a state attendance record by drawing 54,000 last fall, have been outdone by Evangelist Billy Graham, who packed over 60,000 people into the same stadium.

Sharp Crack Corner

Jersey Jones, the well-known cauliflower importer, offers this one: "If the I.B.C. matchmaker lopped one L off the last half of his name and put it on the front half of his handle, you'd have a pretty good description of the fight racket in New York. . . . That, of course, would make it "all well."

End of The Line

The U. of San Francisco basketball team set a distance record (17,643 miles travelled by air) and an attendance record (188,720) last season.

Ray Powell Scoring Leader Of U.S. League

Minneapolis, March 21 (AP) — A spurt in the final two games gave Ray Powell of Kansas City Mohawky the season scoring lead in the United States Hockey League by two points, official figures showed today.

Powell and George Agar of Minneapolis Millers were tied at 102 points going into the final two games of the schedule. Saturday Powell picked up four assists as Agar was shut out. Sunday Agar scored five goals and two assists while Powell earned a goal and four assists.

Powell finished with 111 points and on 27 goals and 84 assists in the 65 games in which he played. Agar, who led the scoring race virtually all season, wound up with 109 points on 44 goals and 65 assists in the 68 games in which he played.

Len Haldorson of Tulsa Oilers grabbed third place with 99 points on 38 goals and 61 assists. Gordon Fashoway of Kansas City had 84 points, and one point behind him was Ed Brunetas of Omaha Knights. Then, in order, came Billy Warwick of Minneapolis, 81; Walt Hergesheimer, Minneapolis, and John Wilson, Omaha, 80; Larry Wilson, Omaha, 79; Frank Ashworth, Tulsa, 77; Hank Blade, Kansas City 74;

Louis Giving Every Indication Of Coming Back

Odessa, Tex., March 21 (AP)— What appears to be probably the worst kept secret of the year will "leak out" Saturday.

Joe Louis, who retired" as heavyweight boxing champion of the world, is giving every indication that he will announce a comeback.

The Brown Bomber finishes his exhibition tour of the United States Saturday at Waco— and there, he says, he will decide whether he will return to the championship fitting line.

All along the way Louis has shown he's preparing for another title fight. He is carrying only 230 pounds—five over the weight he assigned himself. He has had more than 20 fights since Feb. 2, including three that went the full 10 rounds.

The 35-year-old Louis says he doesn't need the money but not to be surprised if he agrees to a bout with Ezzard Charles, the National Boxing Association champion. It it comes off it'll be next September in New York.

Players Aim For Individual Scoring Honors as NHL Team Standings Are Almost Settled

Montreal, March 21 (CP) — With the National Hockey League's first regular 70-game schedule finishing next Sunday night, players this week will be making a last minute rush to capture individual scoring honors.

Team standings already have been decided, except for second place. Detroit Red Wings have clinched the championship and captured the emblematic Prince of Wales Trophy for the second consecutive season.

The Red Wings have 86 points on 36 victories, and 14 ties against 18 losses—and have two games to play, both at home.

Battling it out for second position in three games this week-meeting only once—will be Montreal Canadiens and Toronto Maple Leafs. Each club has 72 points.

New York Rangers and Boston Bruins also have three games to play but the Rangers are sure to win the last play-off slot. The Rangs beat Boston by six points and three victories for Boston coupled with three losses for New York would deadlock the teams in points. However, New York has won five more games than Boston over the season's play to date and this would give them the edge in case of a tie.

Hawks Have Four to Play

The hapless Chicago Black Hawks have the most games to play—four. And the eliminated-but-fighting team from the Windy City was eliminated last Saturday night a mere 48 points to show.

Detroit's left-winger Ted Lindsay scored a handful of winning first place in the individual scoring race. He has 78 points—35 goals and 53 assists—the native of Renfrew, Ont., has set a new team record despite this is only first time in NHL history that a Red Wings player has put up such a high score.

Lindsay also may shoot for another scoring title during the week. His total in the assists field is only one short of the current N.H.L. record of 54 set by Montreal's Elmer Lach in the 1944-45 season.

Eight points behind Lindsay is Detroit's team captain, Sid Abel, with an even 34 goals, 34 assists while teammate Gordie Howe is holding his own in third spot with 66 points, four ahead of Maurice (Rocket) Richard of Montreal.

The Rocket is leading in the sniping division with 41 goals nine short of the NHL mark he set in 1944-45. In fifth place is Boston's Paul Ronty with 57 while Chicago's Metro Prystai and Doug Bentley are tied six points behind.

Keenest in Years

The race for the Vezina Trophy is one of the keenest seen in years. Montreal's Big Bill Durnan has a six goal lead over Harry Lumley of Detroit—146 goals scored against to 152.

Durnan's personal goal-against total of 137 in 61 games was not hurt much when he was sidelined two weeks with a nose injury. Gerry McNeil, Cincinnati Mohawks goalie of the American Hockey League, replaced him during six games and allowed only nine shots past him to make the clubs total 146.

Duran, who has already announced this would be his last season in hockey, held the coveted cup for every season since 1943-44, except in 1947-48 when it went to Toronto's Turk Broda.

Broda still is leading the shutout field with nine. Durnan and Lumley are next with eight each.

Bill Ezinicki of Toronto has the highest total of penalties with 142 minutes in the cooler. A close second is New York's Gus Kyle with 139. Toronto's Ezinicki minutes in the hoosegow make it the most penalized team.

Metro Prystai Still Bedded Down in Hospital

By The Canadian Press

Metro Prystai, centre player with the Chicago Black Hawks, injured in Saturday night's clash with Toronto Maple Leafs, is "resting comfortably," hospital officials said Monday night.

His condition was described as "satisfactory" but the young National Hockey League star is still under observation for a possible concussion. He is in bodychecker Bill Ezinicki in the last few seconds of the game which the Leafs won 3-2.

Ezinicki was given a charging penalty and Bill Tobin, president of the cellar-dwelling Hawks called it a "deliberate charge." Conn Smythe, managing director of the Leaf club, reported that Tobin's charge was "unfair" and that it was a clean bodycheck.

Winnipeg city council Monday night ruled that officials of the Puffin Ski Club must prove their organization does not discriminate against Jewish citizens before the may build a projected ski jump.

The club's application to use a piece of city property was referred back to public works committee.

Ald. M. J. Forkin said the club had expressed a decision to bar Jewish applicants.

Prague's only Monday morning newspaper carried the news of Aga Vrzanova's decision to go into exile. The Czechoslovakian Communist party said this is the world figure skating champion, "the controlled press" made also no mention of it.

But Czechs, who had expected the black-haired Miss Vrzanova to become an exile since she refused her crown March 8 in London, got the news from the Voice of America and the BBC.

Five players on the Pittsburgh Hornets American Hockey League farm team of the Toronto Maple Leafs were recalled to the National Hockey League team Monday.

Hornets were eliminated from the A.H.L. playoff Sunday but the Leafs are battling Montreal Canadiens for second place in the last week of the National Hockey League schedule.

Forwards Les Costello Fleming Mackell and Eldred Kobussen, defenceman Tim Horton and goalie Al Rollins will join Leafs in practice this afternoon and will be available for the game between Leafs and Montreal Canadiens here Wednesday.

At Jacksonville Fla., Cardy Middlecoff the National Open champion, Monday used his "black widow" putter to win the $10,000 Jacksonville golf open with a 72-hole score of 279.

Alan McFater of Toronto won an unanimous eight-round decision over Buddy Hayes of Boston Monday night in the main bout of a professional boxing card at Toronto's Maple Leaf Gardens. McFater weighed 137 pounds Hayes 129.

In the semi-final Billy Fifield, 164, Toronto, won a technical knockout over Billy McCoy, 167, of Port Huron, Mich., in the fifth round of a scheduled eight-round match.

In a preliminary, James J. Parker, 191, Toronto, won a technical knockout over Amos Dorsey, 198, St. Catharines in the third round of a six-rounder.

Training Camp Briefs

St. Petersburg, Fla., — There was more praise today for the New York Yankees' great double-play team of Phil Rizzuto and Gerry Coleman.

Manager Red Rolfe of Detroit Tigers said:

"Give me Rizzuto and I think we could win the pennant. One thing the Yankees can do which is tremendous value to them is make the clutch double play, the real tough one that nobody else can make."

Oakland, Calif. — Chicago Cub catchers are also to experiment with white gloves in an effort to curb pitching wildness.

"Maybe these, wild-throwing pitchers can't see where the catcher is giving them the target with those dark-colored gloves," said manager Frankie Frisch. "It's a real target. They certainly ought to be able to see a white glove. There's nothing in the book to bar it."

Lakeland, Fla. — The luck is running bad again for Charley Keller.

The former New York Yankee slugger is on Detroit Tigers' casualty list and may be out for three weeks. His foot slipped as he threw and he tore the muscles in his left side.

Keller, trying a comeback, said "A lot of hard work and high hopes just went out the window."

Clearwater, Fla.—It looks more every day as though Eddie Waitkus will be the Philadelphia Phillies varsity first baseman when the National League season opens.

Waitkus has been waging a spirited battle to regain the position taken over by Dick Sisler last summer when Eddie was shot by a deranged girl in Chicago.

Villemain Given Split Decision With Gavilan

FRANKFORD

Trent Valley Softball League Organized

Frankford—A recent meeting was held in Campbellford for the organization of the 1950 Trent Valley Softball League. Karl Austin was re-elected President and Barney McColl secretary. The league will affiliate with O.A.S.A. this year, thus overcoming the delay and possible disputes that may arise out of inadequate rules in the league. There is only one change from the six team league of last year, in that Warkworth replaces Colborne.

Wooler has been given permission to bring in outside players for their team, as they intend to carry on in the O.A.S.A. Intermediate 'A' series. This will however bar them from the Trent Valley League playoffs. The winner of the T.V.L. will enter Intermediate 'C' playoffs. Another meeting will be held in Stirling on April 7, to draw up a schedule and complete plans for the coming season.

Frankford expects to field a strong team in the T.V.L. this year. Don Boyle ace hurler for the Merchants will be on hand again this year to continue the brilliant performance he gave last season, in helping Frankford into the T.V.L. finals, and the Eastern Ontario O.A.S.A. semi-finals.

The Frankford Mixed Bowling League saw Elton Thornley high in Trenton with the race for fourth place moving up a notch. He make third the contended position. The Aristocrats moved into a third place tie with the Merry Macs by taking four from the second place Hotspurs, while the Merry Macs were dropping seven to the Skyliners. The Greenhorns broke in their new captain, Bill McKee by romping through the first place Top Hatters for five points. The Happy Gang took at least five points for the Head Pins but the third game ended in a tie. Some of the contending bowlers of Frankford had left the alleys before the final scores were added, and were thus unable to roll off the extra frame until next week. For this reason standings are not published this week.

Windsor Spits Defeat Guelph By 5-1 Score

(By The Canadian Press)

Windsor Spitfires are back in form.

With last night's 5-1 victory over Guelph Biltmores the Spitfires re-established themselves as favorites to cop the Ontario Hockey Association Junior 'A' championship. Down 2-0 to the surprising Biltmores in the best-of-seven finals, the Windsor crew roared back with all the fire that carried them to a 4-1 victory over Toronto Marlboros in the best-of-seven semi-final series.

With Toronto Marlboros established as the O. H. A. Senior 'A' champions, attention is focusing on the Northern Ontario Hockey Association Senior A finals. Last night Sault Ste. Marie Greyhounds and North Bay Black Hawks played to a 3-3 overtime draw in the third game of the best-of-five final series.

Sault Ste. Marie now have a 2-1 lead in games and need only a tie to advance to the all-Ontario series against the champion Spitfires.

Windsor started early last night and, to the delight of 5,600 home fans, rapped in the opening goal at the 34 second mark of the first period, Earl Siebel doing the honors. Just four minutes later it was 2-0 when Jack Bailey rifled a forty-footer into the corner. Continue Powerful Attacks

Continuing their power attacks, the homesters clicked for two more in the middle period, Mike Delich counting his first of two and Vic Howe rapping home the other.

Guelph finally hit pay dirt in the third, Frank Mahaffy and Delich of Mike Delich of Windsor with the Biltmores' only tally at 12:08.

The Greyhounds and Black Hawks crammed all their regular-time scoring into the second period.

Playing coach Don Grosso pushed his Sault club into a one-goal lead but Orlando tied it for the home club Hawks. Zep Zago rammed one in and again the Sault were ahead. Then Bill Dwyer made it 2-2 with the final tally of regulation time.

The 10-minute overtime period produced some fast and furious action. Hugh Christie broke the deadlock in North Bay's favor at 6:43 only to have Shep Shaw get it back with less than three minutes to play.

Windsor and Guelph continue their feud Wednesday night at the Windsor Arena and the Spitfires will be out to even up the record at two home-wins each.

London, March 21 (CP) —Ala Vrzanova of Czechoslovakia, who succeeded Barbara Ann Scott of Ottawa as the world's woman figure-skating champion, is the latest athlete from communist-dominated countries to seek haven in a western land.

The 18-year-old Prague girl, who won the figure skating crown here March 8, for the second straight year, decided Sunday not to return to Czechoslovakia. She was granted permission by the Home Secretary to remain in Britain as an exile.

In Prague, Miss Vrzanova's decision to become an exile had been pretty much expected ever since she retained her title as world's woman figure skating champion in London two weeks ago.

Miss Vrzanova is the third famous skater to receive asylum in British within the past few weeks. The Hungarian, Eel Kiraly, runner-up to Dick Button of the United States in the Wembley competitions, received permission to remain, and so did Jirina Nekolova, another Czech girl.

Answer to Yesterday's Puzzle:

Little Benny's Note Book

I was taking a walk with pop to help his appetite and his figure, and we went passed a letter box with a sine like on it saying, Wet Paint, and I said, O, pop, do you think it really is?

Is what? pop said, and I said, the sine.

The sine says so, no doubt it does, pop said, and I said, I bet you a hunderd dollars it's not, pop.

Have you some advance information on the subject? pop said, and I said, No sir, it's the first time I ever saw the sine and nobody told me about it.But I bet you a hunderd dollars just a same, I said.

Why should you risk an extravagant sum like that on a wild surmise? pop said, and I said, Because the painters would have to be pritty darn smart to come and take down the sine the very minute the paint was dry, even if they weren't too busy some wheres else, so that proves the sine would have to be up a while even after the paint got dry, and, for all we know, this may be that exact time.

The assumption is not illogical, but we've gone past now, so the question will have to remain in the realms of speculation, pop said, and I said, Why will it, pop? why can't I touch it with one finger on our way back? I said.

Would that gesture enrich your life mentally or spiritually? pop said, and I said, No sir, but it would keep me from worrying whether I would of won my bet or not.

Yee gods, use your own discretion and count me out, pop said.

Which I did, proving it was still wet by a green streak on my little finger and later on my face.

Hollywood, March 21. (AP)—After years of being stalled, John O'Hara's famed novel "Appointment in Samara" will finally get to the screen.

We are going to do a revolutionary thing with the book," says Producer Jack Skirball. "We are going to film it as it was written". Of course, some of the sexy stuff will be omitted.

"Samara" has been on film scheduled for many years, but never reached the production stage. Skirball now holds rights as has the censorship problem licked—but he doesn't say what he's going to do about the ending. A suicide is the final note.

He would like Henry Fonda for the lead, if Henry can be separated from "Mr. Roberts".

Notes and Stuff

Roy Rogers is hoping for a boy. He and Dale Evans are expecting in August, and they want a lad to be a companion for their son, Rusty. They have two daughters. Roy is proud of his fancy gold, silver and rubbed saddle, which he has insured for $5,000. He won't ride in it; it's just for show.

Joe E. Brown is in town for a month's vacation before taking "Harvey" to Hawaii and Australia. He denies that the rabbit will become a headliner on the Australian engagements.

Police won't be happy with scenes of the new film, "Cop Hater". Its theme song is heard in "Where the Sidewalk Ends", the Detective Story" and "Mad with Much Heart".

Odd Bits

Mark Stevens is happy to be playing an action role in "Patterns". He says no more musicals for him. . . Jane Russell gets a glamor wardrobe in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes". She says no more musicals for her.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON

and Theo Hilsher

When Elva Tyme is playing, her floundering distresses. She keeps her partner groping with upside down finesses.

A finesse is an attempt to win a trick with some card that is lower than an opponent card. To be successful, the lead must be made through the opponent card and toward your lower card.

For instance, suppose you desire to finesse a queen when one of your opponents has the king. Lead a small card toward the queen. Not a card from the hand that holds the queen.

Suppose you desire to finesse a jack when opponent has the queen. It makes no difference whether or not the king or ace is with the jack. Lead a small card toward the hand that holds the jack.

South is declarer at four spades in this deal:

	SOUTH
	♠A J 10
	♥K Q 7 3 2
	♦Q J 9
	♣K 6
WEST	EAST
♠9 8 7 6	♠10
♥A K 10 9	♥8 7 4 3 2
♦8 6 5 4	♦10 7 3
♣9 8 7 5	♣Q J 10 7 3
	SOUTH
	♠A J 10
	♦A K 2
	♣K 6 2

It looks as if he may lose two hearts at once, a third round of the diamond suit, a third round of clubs. He can avoid this if he save must be made before opponents get their two tricks.

Only hope of saving a trick is with a finesse of the diamond jack. If it loses, the entire play will succeed. Only if queends is in the west has the jack a chance of winning a trick.

So, a diamond is led from dummy toward the south king and ace. Instead, lead a small south diamond toward the dummy's jack. The jack will then win a trick whether or not the queen goes up.

West took two tricks fast with king and ace of hearts. A club was taken with dummy ace. Three small diamonds ended the opponents of trumps. South then led a small heart.

West went up with the queen. South king won the club return. A small diamond was won with dummy jack. South took two top diamonds, the second of these was ruffed the dummy third club.

The only way is always the best way.

Albany, Ga.—A little white hen was fathered up in the chicken yard yesterday after she barely attracted in amongst a dog, a hoss, a horse, a cow and a child.

Her attitude thought she might have hydrophobia Health commissioner D. D. M. Wolfe said, though he never heard of a chicken with rabies.

He suggested the hen may have become mentally unbalanced. She was held for observation.

The conductor raised his baton-less hand.

"It is one of those things that happen once a million years," he announced. "The orchestra is here and ready. The instruments are here. But no concert. We left every scrap of our music in Little Rock."

The Symphony, complete with music, will return here Wednesday night.

Harrisburg, Pa. — Reporter George Fox called his newspaper, The Harrisburg Patriot, last night and informed the city desk: "I have a holding story."

"Is that so?" commented the rewrite man. "Who was the victim?"

"Me", said Fox.

Then Fox told how two men held him at gunpoint and forced him to hand over $40.

Say Husband Wounded Wife, Who Seized Gun And Shot Him Dead

Anniston, Ala., March 21. (AP) —Police said Monday Valentine Pigott, 28, a painter, shot his wife, Velma, 40, walking by his side on a downtown street. Then knocked her down with the gun butt. But Mrs. Pienio leaped up, snatched a weapon and fired four fatal shots into her husband. Mrs. Pienio was wounded in the hand. She told police her husband wanted a divorce. Police quoted her when she suggested he "see a doctor". No charges were placed against her.

Injunction Will Be Dissolved By Legislation

Toronto, March 21 (CP)—The Globe and Mail in an exclusive story today said it had learned that legislation will be introduced by the Ontario Government this week to dissolve the injunction which threatens to close the Kimsarco Vegetable Parchment plant at Espanola, 30 miles west of Sudbury.

The injunction obtained by a group of residents on the Spanish River against pollution of the river by waste from the plant, K.V.P. plant, is effective April 4. Company officials contend they have installed equipment to stop pollution and say that if the injunction is put into force the mill will be forced to close.

An eight man deputation from the town will interview Premier Queen's Park Monday to seek assurance from the government that action would be taken to keep the plant in operation. It is the leading industry in the town and a majority of workers in the area are employed at the plant.

The Espanola delegation included W. J. McLaughlin, George Thornton, Dr. H. H. Harvey, F. J. F. Brown, R. Bridgeman, Tom Yokom and Sam Dice, accompanied by W. J. Patterson of Little current, representing the Chamber of Commerce of the latter community on Manitoulin Island.

Royal Commission Being Demanded In Windsor Probe

Windsor, March 21 (CP)—The Windsor Police Commission inquiry into charges of laxity in law enforcement was spurred today by the demand from a "citizens' committee" for appointment of a Royal Commission.

The city's own inquiry stands adjourned, for at least a week, while special counsel A. Douglas Bell, city attorney of Chatham, seeks information from Detroit police, bearing on allegations first made by County Magistrate J. A. Hanrahan.

The citizens' meeting was called by A. H. Weeks, chairman of a small group calling itself the citizens' action committee, and was attended Monday night by representatives of the local council of women, four clergymen and others.

Chairman of the meeting was R. W. Jackson, insurance salesman well known in young people's work, who said the meeting's object would be to get opinion on what is the duty of the present police commission inquiry. He said the group "who pay for this music" have the right to ask for a Royal Commission if necessary.

A resolution commended Magistrate Hanrahan for his "courage" in the judgment which it spurred the police commission inquiry. That judgment, sentencing Detroit men to the maximum term of six months for keeping liquor for sale, noted that Assistant Crown Attorney was not carried on without hindrance from the police.

Drastic Action Required

The citizens' meeting passed a third resolution praising the Windsor Daily Star for its "courage and leadership." The Star has attacked the working of the present policy inquiry and in its editorial columns Monday said that "much more drastic action is required . . . before the situation in Windsor is corrected."

One of the many angles in the situation was cleared up. This was the case of two sheets missing from a list lifted from the customers of Assef. The list, containing mere addresses, not names, is said to have the addresses of Windsor policemen listed as customers.

During Friday's sitting of the police commission it was announced two of the sheets in this list were missing. Monday Mcgirratie Angus W. MacMillan, chairman of the police commission, told The Canadian Press he understood the documents were destroyed by the caretaker on the floor of the courtroom after the inquiry adjourned Friday, and that the caretaker had placed them in the drawer of a courtroom desk.

Price Reduction Will Expand Milk Market

Seigniory Club, Que., March 21. (CP)—Canada's University professor suggests that one of the most promising ways of expanding the market for bottled milk is to cut costs and pass part of the cut on to consumer.

G. L. Burton, professor of Agricultural Economics at Macdonald College, St. Anne de Bellevue, told the Canadian Milk Dairy Council today that besides the idea of square bottles there are at least three more practical changes that may help build up the Canadian milk industry. They are:

1. Distribute less milk to homes and more by bulk distribution, an avenue cuts hauling costs and permits cheaper milk to the consumer.

2. Grant the consumer a price cut for buying more than one bottle at a time.

3. Reduce the cost of handling milk from the farmer's gate to the dairy plant.

Price Discussion

Prof. Burton was one of five agricultural specialists taking a panel discussion on the Canadian dairy future. The others are in the last day of a three-day annual conference.

Other participants were E. G. Silverwood, London, Ont., president of the council; Dr. Grant B. L. A. Atkins of Vancouver, manager of the Agricultural Division, Canada Valley Creamery Ltd., W. Frank Jones of Toronto, president of Silverwood Dairies Co. Ltd., and J. Turnbull of Regina, manager, Saskatchewan Co-operative Creamery Association.

Elaborating on his cut-cost theme, Prof. Burton said a recent study of distributing costs in New York showed that "when handling milk to stores, rather than to homes, the cost per bottle per quart can be made.

He suggested that the current practice of charging the same price no matter how many bottles are purchased at one time is incentive to sales.

He offered instead the idea of printing a blue ticket for two quarts, an orange one for three quarts and a yellow ticket for four quarts and selling these tickets for proportionately lower prices than the one-quart ticket.

FILIBUSTER ROLLS

One Liberal member—George Murray (L-Cardwell)—praised Ilsley—ranged himself with the opposition and said he wanted to see "Canada served first—then the United States.' His riding of Cardwell was one area that would be served by the gas line.

Many Speakers Heard

Other speakers included George Murray (L-Cardwell), Paul Hellyer (L-Skeena), Howard Green (PC-Vancouver Quadra), Angus MacInnis (CCF-Vancouver East), Gordon Higgins (PC-St. John's East); W. Ross Macdonald (CCF-Queens), Stanley Knowles (CCF-Winnipeg North Centre), Julien Fergusson (PC-Simcoe North), R. R. Knight (CCF-Saskatoon), Paul Hellyer (L-Toronto Davenport) and L. E. Cardiff (PC-Huron North).

The Senate approved a motion by Senator Arthur Roebuck (L-Ontario) for a committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms. The committee will study freedoms and their protection and preservation and indicate what action should be taken to guarantee them.

In the Commons, Mr. Drew said he was for the export of Canadian surpluses, but added: "Let us follow a policy of Canada first in the use of the resources which we possess."

Mr. Caldwell recalled that Canadians, not many years ago had been "hewers of wood and drainers of water" for the United States because they had allowed their resources to be exported. Every time Canada allowed her resources to be exported, she encouraged the flow of young Canadians to the U.S.

Mr. Ferguson urged the chamber to "stop and think what we are going to give away to the U.S.A." As Canadians we wanted to protest the "continual giving away of our resources."

Appeals to Liberals

He appealed to Liberal members in the opposition in saying they would give a Canadian birthright to American interests. He was sure 80 percent of the Liberals did not realize what the pipe-line legislation was for. Most of them would simply vote the way the government told them to.

He said he knew nothing about oil or gas lines, but he did know that if the lines were built in Canada they would provide employment.

Mr. Knowles suggested the legislation be altered that the federal legislation could be amended to provide that any company receiving incentive would have to build its line in Canada.

Mr. Macinnis, Mr. Applewhaite and Mr. Hellyer suggested the measure be given second reading.

Opposition members who spoke on the measure followed the pattern of their leaders — that Canadians be given first choice on Canadian resources and that the legislation not be adopted until the company guaranteed an all-Canadian line to the coast.

BILL TO ALLOW

J. B. Salsberg (Lab.-Prog.—Toronto St. Andrews) said the bill is looking for trouble. The vice-chairman of the Board was "deliberate preparation for the Canadian murder rings of Toronto with its Suburbs."

Legislation Contemplated

Premier Frost said the bill had no connection with proposals to amalgamate Toronto and the municipalities. No legislation to compel annexation was contemplated by the government at this session.

Mr. Salsberg said the Municipal Board was "a dictatorship loaded above democratically-elected municipal governments."

F. O. Robinson, (C.C.F.—Port Arthur) and William Houck (L.—Niagara Falls) also criticized the municipalities, defended the Board as being "impartial and fair tribunal."

C. C. Calder (L.—London) said the Board was "a small, curious municipal" body, "a court of judicial functions. It should behave like a court and not interfere with written judgments, observing rules of evidence and providing for an appeal and declaration."

May Be Legal Precedent

Mr. Calder said the Board recently had made decisions which for the first time affected bus franchises. It was made considered a legal precedent but the Board refused to give the reason for its judgment. There was no right of appeal.

Mr. Dunbar said the only increase in the Board's powers since 1932 was in 1946 when councils were refused permission to undertake work which would increase taxes more than a year and was not provided for in the estimates without permission of the Board.

Liberal Leader Farquhar Oliver said the work of the Board should be lightened by relieving it of some of its less important duties, such as hearing applications for Public Vehicle Licences. These could best be dealt with through the Highways Department.

Second reading was also given a bill providing for the registration and supervision of prepaid, non-profit medical service plans. Public Accountants Licences are under the jurisdiction of insurance legislation.

AT THE BELLE

"SAMSON AND DELILAH" A SUPERB FILM

Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production of "Samson and Delilah" which opened yesterday at the Belle Theatre, is destined to go down in motion picture history as one of the greatest films of all time. This Technicolor spectacle makes an undeniable bid for screen immortality with a story of love, hate, intrigue, orgy of an epic and a cast that obviously was inspired rather than told to be the monumental challenge the picture presented.

It's impossible to praise too highly the incomparable performance of Hedy Lamarr and Victor Mature who portray the title roles. As the bewitching Delilah Miss Lamarr appears almost enslaved a man where mighty hands had failed. Miss Lamarr is unbelievably beautiful in her first Technicolor film. And she proves herself a dramatic actress of fire and persuasion. Ranging the emotional scale from infinite tenderness to burning hatred, she is superb.

Mature, also, handles a particularly difficult role of credibility, never once stumbling in what would have been an excusable lapse. Physically the perfect image of Gaza, Whether falling prey to Delilah's seductive charms, as he must, at night, or performing prodigious feats of strength, Mature makes Samson a real and dynamic character. Magnificent is the word for his performance.

That same adjective wins be applied to practically every member of the cast which numbers more than a thousand. But particular mention must be made of George Sanders, as the suave Saran of Gaza; Angela Lansbury, Delilah's best friend, and Henry Wilcoxon, the determined leader of the Philistine armies. Under DeMille's astute direction, they contribute immeasurably to the greatness of "Samson and Delilah."

Basically, the film is a powerful story of a man's fight to free his enslaved people, his betrayal and his ultimate retribution. But words cannot accurately describe the color, pageantry and thrilling excitement which builds to a breathtaking climax in "Samson and Delilah."

AT THE McCARTHY — Robert Cummings, left, and Donald Woods shake hands when they meet in Universal-International's "Free For All", but during most of the laugh-a-minute comedy they bat each other or Cummings' invention to convert water into gasoline, and for the attentions of lovely Ann Blyth. "Free For All" is the current feature attraction at the McCarthy Theatre.

Woman Fined Under Foreign Exchange Act

St. Catharines, March 21 (CP) — A woman who attempted to carry $7,781 in securities and $113 in cash across the Canadian - U.S. border at the Rainbow Bridge, Niagara Falls, was fined $750 on two charges under the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

The woman, Mrs. Babina Slivinsky of Buffalo and St. Catharines, pleaded guilty to unlawfully exporting securities and currency from Canada without a permit, and to wilfully attempting to deceive a customs officer.

Calling the charges "just another catastrophe that has befallen her," defence counsel John Cooper said Mrs. Slivinski did not realize how much money she had her purse.

Dude College

By Oren Arnold

They found big car and Ronnie drove away with him. At the Varsity Pharmacy she bought bandage and disinfectant, telling the clerk she'd scratched arms and bruises came from an accidental fall. He helped her. The young man first aid. Then Ronnie drove Wes around town a bit and ended up again at the gymnasium.

"I'm leaving you now, boy friend," she said jaconically. "Our first date's over. And Wes— you drive straight home. Promise!"

"—All right."

"Good night. At least I haven't had any time to be bored this evening! And I've got some things to tell a certain party, believe me!"

Wes was glad enough to get home.

The evening had been a hectic one for him, too, and even though it was still not 11 o'clock, he felt that late enough. Besides, his face was still numb and he suspected it showed discolorations.

He slept poorly because his mind could find no repose. At dawn the facial signs were even more marked, and so he stayed inside most of the day. His mother, concerned over the "accident," gave him more attention than he needed, and on Monday he was presentable again.

At noon Monday the tri-weekly Pueblo Periodico student newspaper with a Spanish name, came out with a brief item about his fall, and Wes noted with gratitude that Ronica had also told the reporter it was an accident. But the same paper also carried this:

"Ronica Bailey, transfer student from New York, Sunday flew her golden aeroplane to Phoenix Ariz., with Andre Girardeau as a guest. Mr. Girardeau, retired capitalist, is spending the autumn season at a ranch near Pueblo. He and Miss Bailey were friends in New York before the Baileys moved to New Mexico.

Chatty all the item said. Just a little personal society brief. But it disturbed Wes York immeasurably. Finally, in his mind, Ronnie thought a great deal of Andre Girardeau, and so regarded Andre's conduct last evening as excusable, principally because he had been drinking before coming to the dance.

"Ronnie doesn't drink," Wesley murmured to himself, staring at the paper, "But this Girardeau, 'retired capitalist' it says."

There was the same old bugaboo, money. A man with money is a power. Wesley wanted but little money for himself. His salary and prospects he felt adequate to care for himself and his mother, even for a wife if ever he thought to marry some humble girl. But—

He didn't have very good lectures in class that day and he himself realized it. He dismissed his students rather early in each period. His mind just wouldn't get back in its groove.

Tuesday wasn't much better. He spent a great deal of time alone in the library. He saw nothing of Ronnie nor of Lora Montoya save once when Lora crossed the campus several yards away. He purposely avoided meeting her.

He noted that she no longer used her crutch. Without it she walked with infinite grace.

Wednesday was his regular field day, and at 1 o'clock he was driving his old sedan out toward the Rainbow Canyon Cliff Dwellings 12 miles from Pueblo where he was regularly doing excavation work. The road out went near the university polo field. He glanced at a group of riders at practice, then stopped his car.

From his shoulder pack he took a powerful binoculars and studied the horsemen. One, he perceived instantly was Andre Girardeau, and another was Ronnie herself.

He could see her bright flash of laughter and color of her hair and costume Girardeau also was dressed modishly, as usual, Morosely, Wes drove on.

The field day wasn't very fruitful mainly because Wesley spent most of the time meditating on matters aside from work. Back home, he settled to reading. Thursday was mediocre, too, and on Friday, starting from his third floor office in the administration building he saw Andre Girardeau emerge from the law entry then take Ronica away.

Wesley felt very sad—better for him. By being alert he had managed not to come face to face with either Ronnie or Lora this week. Like the shy person he was, he was both anxious and afraid to see the two girls, especially Ronnie.

Saturday night he took his mother to a movie. Afterward he read a while, then walked out alone at midnight to eat a sandwich and coffee. Still moody, lonely, he continued walking down Apache street and cut onto the high semi-desert land, and when he had meditated there under the stars for an hour he started sad back home.

Some vague inner yearning led him this time via Montoya residence, so that presently he was near Lora Montoya's residence. Her apartment was the west side of a duplex. It was dark, but he leaned against a tree to stare at her door as a girl-struck boy might do, and was thinking of both Lora and Ronica when Lora's door rather abruptly opened.

Still no light shone, but a man came quietly out.

Wesley's chin dropped in surprise. He recognized the figure at once. Instantly he watched while Andre Girardeau crossed the street, walked a block or two in his shiny new coupe parked there and drove away.

Then Wes stretched his wrist to catch the moonlight. His watch showed 1:20 in the morning.

Somebody tapped on Wesley York's office door at noon, then opened it before he could speak. She came in like a part of the breeze itself.

"Well!" she beamed at him across his desk, violet eyes wide and full of fun. "Your name is familiar but—I can't quite place your face! Have you been purposely hiding from me?"

He stood up. "Hello Ronnie! Certainly good to see you!"

"Is it?"

"Certainly is. I—"

"Then why have you waited so long! Golly, Wes, I never ran after a man in all my life as I have to you! Leave your books and let's go flying."

"Thanks, but — another time. I've got to get busy on—"

"Riding, Wes! Some other woman, I bet!"

"Uh, no! Indeed!" He lapsed into seriousness for a moment, then realized she was still joking. "Oh. I—no. I was just going to ride out to Rainbow Canyon. Big cliff dwelling there, and I want to measure growth rings on the ancient timbers in an effort to verify dates of construction, which according to Dr. Douglass will—"

"May I go Wesley?"

"Huh? Sh-sure—why yes. Yes! Quite, so Ronnie! I should have thought to ask you myself. It would be a distinct pleasure to have you ride out with me. Yes, indeed!"

"Sure I won't make a threesome?"

"Ronnie you are an inveterate tease!"

Wesley York was highly exhilarated by this call from Ronnie Bailey. For days he had literally moped. He had avoided her, then sought her without success. Not that he had actually tried to telephone or call on her but he had dreaded coming and had begun hoping to meet her casually. Fate is seldom kind in such instances, but now she had phoned, popped up in characteristic style.

She was like a chemical stimulant. In a matter of minutes she had lifted him. When he met her at the University stables half an hour later, he was like a man who had shuffled off 10 chronic worries.

He helped her mount a big palomino gelding.

"Rope, first aid kit, canteen, pistol, matches, emergency food, notebook and pencil, all in your pack and ready," he informed her

Belgians Opposed To King, Call Work Stoppages

By WILLIAM ANDERSON

Brussels, March 21 (AP) — Belgians opposed to the return of King Leopold III began a round of work stoppages Mon., calling out 30,000 men to underscore determination of their opposition to the pro-Leopold forces.

Tramway and foundry workers walked off the job in Liege and scattered, parts of the country, but the hardest hit city was Antwerp, where 128 ships were immobilized.

The entire port administrative staff, including 126 pilots, joined with 11,000 dock and shipyard workers in a 24-hour strike.

In Brussels, Premier Gaston Eyskens began negotiations seeking a solution to the political crisis precipitated when his coalition cabinet of Socialists, Christians and Liberals resigned Saturday.

The strike wave, spreading into Brussels, Liege, Antwerp and other large plants and several small plants in the capital, in Verviers, East Belgium, street car workers went on strike.

Armed clashes between partisans and opponents of the exiled king were reported from Leuden and Erpa-Que. State police forces quelled the fights and no casualties were reported.

Held up 6 Times, Woman Ready, Wounds Gunman

New York, Mar. 21 (CP)—Mrs. Evelyn Lanier, 26, has been held up six times in the last year while serving as all-night clerk in her husband's grocery store.

So she was ready when two youths walked in the store at 3:30 a.m. EST Sunday.

One drew a pistol and said, "This is a stick-up."

Mrs. Lanier, mother of a small daughter, dropped behind the counter and came up shooting.

The gunman returned the fire. He fell, shot through the right arm. His pal fled.

Police booked the wounded man Thomas Wright, 22, on charges of assault and attempted robbery.

After questioning Mrs. Lanier on the details they also booked her on charges of illegally possessing a firearm.

Police said she had no pistol permit.

Wolfe Laughs When Sentenced To Electric Chair

New York, March 21 (CP) — Lewis Wolfe, convicted of murdering his actress wife in 1944, broke into gales of laughter Monday when he was sentenced to die in the electric chair the week of April 23.

The wealthy 42-year-old former Montreal contractor was sentenced by Judge Louis Goldstein, who had scolded him sane.

Permitted to address the court before sentencing, Wolfe spoke incoherently of his "beautiful love" for his slain wife and of his desire to "whitewash" to life on the night she was bludgeoned to death with a steel-tipped shoe.

"No jury in the world would call me insane," Wolfe said, speaking with the sanity finding of Judge Goldstein.

Wolfe was convicted of first-degree murder when he first appeared for trial in 1944. The state charged that he did it in a fit of rage when his wife confessed infidelity.

But before sentence was imposed, Wolfe was pronounced insane and committed to Matteawan state hospital.

The convicted slayer was returned to court for sentencing last month after his release from Matteawan.

First US Planes Under Arms Aid Fly to Britain

By JOHN SCALI

Washington, March 21 — (AP) —The first batch of about 75 American B-26s takes off for Britain Monday under the $1,000,000,000 Arms aid program to strengthen western Europe's defences.

Four of the reconditioned bombers, manned by American crews leave nearby Andrews field this afternoon bound for a British airbase.

The seven-year-old planes, once the heaviest the American air force could send aloft, now are classed as "medium bombers" The giant B-36 is alone in the heavy bomber class now.

But the 2,000-mile combat range and 10-ton bomb load of the B-29 are expected to add considerable striking power to the R.A.F. Britain, in line with allied defense plans, has concentrated on building speedy jet fighters, leaving bomber production to the United States.

The four-engine planes, now powered by modernized engines are the first American arms to be handed over to Britain under the arms program approved by Congress last October. They will also be the first to reach their European destination.

Forty-eight American Helicat fighters and Hellidiver bombers were likewise aboard the French aircraft carrier Dixmude at Norfolk, Va., March 3. These were the first American weapons actually given to an Atlantic Pact country but were not expected to arrive at Bizerte, the French naval base in North 'Africa, for some time.

Additional carloads of American military equipment are now piling up at east coast ports for shipment to other western European countries, including Portugal, commercial vessels.

Most of the supplies will go to the French under the allied plan to bolster those countries having the greatest available manpower. French defence officials have put the value of American arms they are to receive at $454,000,000.

Toronto Mar. 20—(CP)—The Dionne quintuplets made their debut before television cameras Sunday in the living room of their Callander home.

The film and sound track Monday are on the way to Hollywood where producer Jim Roache will splice them into one of the biggest TV shows on record—an Easter Sunday program from Father Patrick Peyton's family theatre in the film capital. Bing Crosby, Jimmy Durante and other stars of the Roman Catholic faith also will be in the show.

The Dionne sequence will show the family reciting the Rosary as they do each Sunday evening during the year and every evening during Lent.

Commission Will Voluntarily Pay Municipal Taxes

Ottawa, March 21 — (CP) — The Ottawa Hydro-Electric Commission this year will voluntarily begin paying municipal taxes in much the same manner as private companies.

Frank Plante, commission chairman, said Monday night that the commission has decided to take advantage of legislation passed by the Ontario Legislature last year allowing publicly-owned corporations like the commission to pay all municipal taxes except school taxes. Payment of the taxes is not mandatory.

He said the decision will mean that the commission, which supplies electricity for some 60,000 customers in the capital, will pay about $300,000 annually to the city of Ottawa in taxes.

The Ottawa commission is believed to be the first in the province to take advantage of the legislation. Commission officials here said they understood the Toronto Hydro Commission is considering taking a similar step.

Uniform Marketing Laws on Farm Products Planned

D-P Conference Sponsored By Federation of Agriculture

Ottawa, March 22 — (CP) — Canadian agriculture officials today began drafting recommendations designed to make marketing legislation uniform across the country and to regulate inter-provincial and export farm trade.

More than 100 delegates representing the federal government, the 10 provincial governments and nations met behind closed doors to draw up the recommendations that will later be presented to provincial governments.

Discuss Marketing Scheme

Opening sessions Tuesday of the two-day Dominion-Provincial conference, sponsored by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, were spent discussing implications of a national marketing scheme.

C.F.A. Legal Counsel R. H. Milliken told delegates that every province except Quebec now has legislation under which provincial marketing boards can operate to regulate marketing of products within their own boundaries.

But, he pointed out, these regulations, however, the legislation cannot apply to inter-provincial and export farm trade. A federal statute — the Agricultural Products Marketing Act — was approved last year to extend Provincial Marketing Board powers into the interprovincial and export field.

An Obvious Need

H. H. Hannam, C.F.A. president in opening the conference, told delegates there was an obvious need for at least "a minimum of uniformity of legislation and procedure" in legislation in force in the various provinces governing the marketing of inter-provincial and export farm trade. "A maximum of co-ordination in the various provinces is highly desirable."

Special By-Law To be Prepared For Maple Leafs

Toronto, Mar. 22 (CP). — A special by-law will be prepared to permit the Maple Leaf Hockey Club to hold Sunday games here if the Board of Control decided today.

A second by-law will be prepared for those designating other Sunday activities and locations where they may be carried on, the board decided.

Mayor Hiram McCallum told the board the International Baseball League schedule must be arranged immediately if other clubs in the loop were to be given the opportunity to make arrangements for home games. The Maple Leafs perform in the International League.

The Ontario Legislature yesterday passed a bill permitting sports to be played on Sunday afternoons between 1.30 and 6 p.m. in municipalities which approve the measure.

Toronto voters already have voted in favor of legalizing commercial Sunday sports.

Radiological Health Hazard Under Study

Ottawa, Mar. 22 (CP) — The Health Department today announced formation of a new section to study problems of potential health hazards caused by increased use of radioactive materials and radioisotopes in medical research.

Dr. G. H. Guest, former head of the Health Radiation Branch in the National Research Council's atomic energy project at Chalk River, Ont., will take charge of the work.

The new radiological health section will co-operate closely with department's Industrial Health Division and with other agencies because more and more radioactive materials are being distributed in Canada, Dr. J. C. Meakins, Chief of the division, said.

The new section will deal with radiological health problems referred to the Federal Health Department, and will collect information on radiological health and disseminate government policy, assist provincial and local health agencies in kindred problems.

NO TRACE OF MEN ON FLOE

Anchorage, Alaska, March 22— (CP)—No trace was found Tuesday of three men reported seen drifting to sea on an ice floe in Cook Inlet, Alaska. The sighting of flimsy sighting khaki jackets on the drifting floe was talked by a helicopter pilot and a reporter who said the "rockets" were merely paper bags full of garbage.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Toronto, March 22 — (CP) — Synopsis: The second day of spring will be mostly cloudy over the province with occasional light rain or drizzle in southern sections and light snow north of Lake Superior. The cause of this dull weather is a weak disturbance over Michigan which will move eastward across Ontario during today. In its wake the precipitation will end and the sun will break through the clouds again on Thursday.

BRITAIN ADVISED NOT TO RECOGNIZE SERETSE KHAMA

Inquiry Commission Report Made Public

London, March 22 (Reuters) — The official commission of inquiry which inquired into the chieftainship dispute in the Bamangwato tribe of Bechuanaland has unanimously advised Britain against recognizing Seretse Khama as tribal king, the government disclosed today.

The commission — whose report has been kept secret — also recommended that Seretse be excluded from his tribe.

In a white paper published today on Britain's thorniest Empire problem for years, the government gave its reasons for refusing to publish the commission's report. Both the banished Seretse and his white wife from his native Bechuanaland for five years.

Certain arguments were advanced in the report and views expressed which could not be accepted by the government and which, if they could not associate themselves, the white paper said.

"The danger that such parts of the report would be quoted without being made clear that they had not the approval of His Majesty's government is so great that the government have therefore have decided that the report cannot be published," the document went on.

Absence Essential

It added: "His Majesty's government must, however, state categorically that the judicial enquiry unanimously advised against the recognition of Seretse.

"It expressed its belief that its views circumstances Seretse's absence from the Bechuanaland protectorate was essential to the peace and good order of the Bamangwato reserve, and that a period of direct rule was desirable in the best interests of the Bamangwato.

"It further advised that Tshekedi (Seretse's uncle and former regent of the tribe) be appointed his nephew's marriage to his white wife, Ruth Williams) should not be permitted to return to the reserve."

Seretse is being allowed to return temporarily to Bechuanaland to collect evidence for an inheritance lawsuit and be with his wife when she has her baby in June.

The white paper contained a plea that the tribe might be allowed to stay in the protectorate beyond this period of grace — as long as his presence does not cause trouble.

SCOOPS UP $700

Windsor, Ont., Mar. 22 (CP)— A bandit has been reported escaped from a downtown drug store Tuesday night with an estimated $700 in cash and cheques.

Two store employees, William Barnes and Miss Vickie Bass, stood helplessly by as the robbery was committed. The man kept one hand in his pocket as if he were holding a weapon. Four other persons were in the store at the time making purchases.

The robbery is the third in the last five days. Friday night a total of $10,000 was taken in two robberies and was recovered Monday night with shotgun wounds.

Girl's Message Calling for F.B.I. Aid Ends Her Travels With Man of 52

San Jose, Calif., March 22 (AP)—A 12-year-old girl's telephoned plea "send the F.B.I. for me" ended a strange story of a month trans-continental travels with a 52-year-old man.

Sheriff's officers placed Florence (Sally) Horner in a juvenile detention home Tuesday night, after finding her in an auto court. She was separated only word from her father, Mrs. Ella Horner of Camden, N.J., about sending Sally home.

Sheriff Howard Hornbuckle said charges of kidnapping and female across state lines for immoral purposes would be filed today against Frank La Salle, unemployed mechanic.

The lanky suspect said she had telephoned her sister, Mrs. Susan Panaro, 29, in Beverly, N.J., for help. She did not explain why she hadn't reported her whereabouts previously since shortly after she disappeared.

Detective Marshall Thompson said Mrs. Horner told police her story about her daughter's disappearance.

In June, 1948, Sally said she had been invited to accompany two classmates and their fathers on a motor trip to Atlantic City seashore for a vacation. Mrs. Horner talked to the man on the telephone, and let him take her daughter go.

The father accompanied Sally to a bus station where the girl was to be rejoined the above bound bus. Sally wrote Mrs. Horner that she was all right, and was staying at the above longer than planned. Then she wrote that "Warner" was moving to Baltimore and was taking her along.

Mrs. Horner, suspicious, notified police. No trace of Sally or "Warner" was found until the girl telephoned her sister.

Proposes Doubled Wolf Bounty And Payment of Professional Hunters to Destroy Wolves

Toronto, March 22. (CP)—The Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters today referred to the Ontario Legislature Fish and Game Committee its recommendations regarding game.

The brief, read by President H. V. Sutton, asked that nonresident deer hunters be required to be accompanied by a licensed guide. Guides would be licensed to carry firearms.

Junior licences for hunters under 16 years of age accompanied by a licensed parent or guardian should be issued, the brief said.

As an experiment, professional hunters should be paid to kill wolves and other predators.

Use of snares should be outlawed in the following townships: Tay Macdonald, Edmola, Orillia Tiny and Oro in Simcoe County and Hungerford township in the district of Muskoka.

Sale of jack rabbits, cottontail rabbits and hare should be prohibited, the federation said, and the bag limited to six.

Breach of Regulations

Hunters or anglers twice convicted of breaches of regulations should lose their licence for five years.

A brief submitted by the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters Association asked that the Ontario government seek to have a uniform fishing licence for the province. The department of lands and Forests should give "serious consideration" to control of private camps used as unlicensed tourist lodges.

Wallace McKee of Sudbury, presented a brief on behalf of the New Ontario Trappers Association.

Asks Other Counties

It asked that the present $25 bounty on wolves be doubled and made to apply to pups as well as adults, a bounty should be paid on bald 'an bear and fox.

A trapper should not lose his licence after only one conviction without having his case reviewed by wild-life supervisors.

The Association asked that snares be allowed in northern areas where dogs are not used extensively in hunting.

Snares should be permitted for taking beaver under ice, where they would drown quickly, Mr. McKee said.

An applicant for a trappers licence should be required to satisfy the inspector of traplines that he is capable and qualified.

Earlier Dates Urged

Bert Taylor of Belleville asked that opening dates for deer hunting in the French and Pickerel river watersheds be the first Monday in November rather than Nov. 10.

Mr. Taylor said thousands of dollars of equipment was lost when camps were frozen in.

Lumbering tote roads no longer gave access out of the bush.

In the absence of Hon. Douglas McKay of Norwich, Dr. W. J. K. Harkness, Chief of the Fish and Wildlife Division, told the committee that bounties would be limited protesting the use of ferrets in hunting.

The ferrets of Timagami said wolves in the Timagami district were decreasing. It was not worth the trappers time to hunt wolves for a $25 bounty. Trappers should be compelled to hunt wolves for a bounty of $100, the department would supply them with poison, he said.

Harold Walker, vice-chairman of the committee, representing La Quetico-Superior International Nature Committee, filed a brief a brief that the government's support for the plant which is aimed at preserving recreational facilities and the natural wealth of the area, should be co-ordinated with United States authorities.

J. M. Newman (Lib.-Lab.—Raisy River) said roadless parkways would deprive residents of the district of benefits of a new highway connecting them with the eastern part of the province.

Misinterpretation Of Signal Thought Cause of Wreck

Carleton Place, March 22 (CP) —Misinterpretation of a brakeman's three-word signal may have caused the freight-train wreck at Ashton station Saturday in which two men were killed.

Engineer George Wilson, testifying at an inquest Tuesday said his train had to be stopped in its tracks to avoid striking the pulpit. As a result he stopped with the rear cars of the freight still on the main line.

Front-end brakeman William K. Bangs' said the signal he meant only "Stop" but that he reached the proper point from where a driver of a truck, hit the car at Ashton station, could be uncoupled and moved into another siding on the station side of the main line.

The second freight, train No. 89, crashed into the rear of the extra freight in a blinding snowstorm early Saturday, killing engineer Wilson's Arthur Travers A. Short and fireman George Hannan, both of Ottawa.

Following taking of evidence last night, the inquest was adjourned until April to permit brakeman Thomas Watson, injured in the wreck and now in hospital, to give evidence.

Plenty of Moose Seen In Nipissing Reserve

North Bay, March 22 — (CP)— There are plenty of moose in the Nipissing Indian reserve, according to Henry C. Haskins, Lands Department official. Mr. Haskins returned Tuesday from a 10-day boundry-marking expedition at the southern end of the reserve.

"We saw plenty of deer kills by wolves," he added, "and we heard wolves nearly every night."

Nipissing game reserve begins 30 miles north of here. It is bordered on the west by Highway 11 on the east by Northland Railway line and stretches north for 50 miles to Strathcona township's southern border.

Labor to Keep Nationalization In Background

By ALLAN HARVEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 22 — (CP) — Labor's top policy-makers today studied a post-mortem on the party's performance in last month's general election.

They also considered proposals for fighting the next one, whenever it comes.

The report on Labor's showing in the Feb. 23 vote, including a detailed analysis of returns in what were considered marginal constituencies, was prepared by party general secretary Morgan Phillips and Richard Winslade, national agent.

It was presented to the Labor party's national executive which today held its first meeting since the election.

The election results show that of the 187 members elected by a majority of 5,000 or less, among three or more candidates, Labor won 102 and the Conservatives 102 for the Conservatives.

Considerable heart-searching has taken place among the Labor rank and file as a result of the election defeat. The party's leaders left wing seems to have been considerably chastened but nearly all observers agree that in future there should be no compromise with nationalization of iron and steel.

But nationalization as an end in itself is no longer popular with all or even a majority. It seems probable that future nationalization measures mentioned in the election manifesto—sugar, water supplies, road haulage, assessment and cold-storage facilities—will be kept in the background indefinitely, though not necessarily shelved.

Governor-General Received by King

London, March 22 (CP) —Visiting Governor-General, Governor-General Vincent Massey, received in audience by the King at Buckingham Palace.

Later Viscount and Lady Alexander lunched with the King and Queen.

The Governor-General is making a private visit to Britain. He and Lady Alexander arrived by an RCAF plane March 15 and return to Ottawa next week.

INDIANS GOING TO GET NEW DEAL BY GOVERNMENT

Bill of Rights To be 'Introduced

Ottawa, March 22 — (CP) — Canada's 135,000 Indians are going to get a new deal.

That was made clear in the Commons Tuesday when Citizenship Minister Harris disclosed that legislation establishing a new Bill of Rights for the Red Man probably will be introduced by the government within the next month.

The intention now, he said, is what procedure to follow to give Indian bands a chance to have their say on the contents of the legislation, product of a long study of the Indian question by a parliament committee a couple of years ago.

Opposition members immediately suggested that plebiscites be done to improve the Indian's lot.

The Indian question emerged as one of the high features of what was an odds-and-ends day in the Commons. It came up as the Chamber considered supplementary estimates of $65,986,459 for the fiscal year ending with government's 1949-50 fiscal year.

The Chamber's discussions ranged over the broad front of governmental and non-governmental activities, from unemployment in Newfoundland, freight rates, the Senate, pensions for persons and the building of a parliamentary office for Canadian prime ministers.

Swung Into Debate

In the Senate, Senator A. N. McLean (L—New Brunswick) swung the Upper Chamber into a debate on freight rates during study of a private bill to allow the Canadian Pacific railway to join Canadian National Railways in buying the original stock of the Shawinigan Falls Terminal Railway Company.

Period of Grace For Tardy Drivers In Some Cities

Toronto, March 22 (CP)— Police crashed down in Ontario cities Tuesday on motorists still driving with 1949 licence plates.

In many communities, however, he has favored to be granting an extra-unofficial —period of grace for tardy drivers.

More than 1,000 were booted in Toronto and will be summonsed as are motorists using more than four the March 20 deadline.

Provincial Police of the Woodstock district reported 50 motorists charging some 30 motorists. Kingston police said they had 1949 plates were seen Tuesday and 40 to 50 charges were laid.

St. Catharines city police said they issued no tickets Monday but 100 summonses were issued.

Ontario highway traffic is being granted to motorists in Kingston, Oshawa, St. Thomas and Brantford. Belleville, Galt and Guelph don't intend to start stopping cars until today. Galt attributed the pressure because license officers were unable to handle Monday's 11th-hour rush.

Mrs. Kilbon Was 'Medically Dead' Defence Argues

Stomach Wound Would Have Caused Death--Doctor

Cobourg, March 22 — (CP) — The defence contended today that Mrs. Irene Kilbon was dead — "legally, medically and from a standpoint of common sense" — before her husband fired a rifle bullet into her brain.

Ralph Kilbon is no killer, said Defence Counsel J. J. Robinette as the two-day "mercy killing" trial neared its conclusion.

His action in shooting his 54-year-old,-mentally-ill wife after she mortally wounded herself in a suicide attempt was "an act born of love or confusion of thought," said Mr. Robinette.

Dr. matt deCarle was witness for Arthur M. Doyle of Toronto, and the head wound hastened Mrs Kilbon's death. But she had "no hope or recovery" from the self-inflicted wound. As soon as the first bullet entered her stomach, she was "medically dead."

No Effort at Concealment

"She was an intelligent woman who knew she was going to the mental hospital at Whitby," said Mr. Robinette. "Knowing that fateful morning, went out for a pail of water. While he was out, she got the gun and shot herself.

"He finds her lying on the floor, picks her up and places her in the chair. No one can tell if she were alive or dead then. He saw her suffering and he committed an act of love or confusion of thought. He made no effort to conceal anything . . . This man was no killer . . .

"Legally, medically and from a standpoint of common sense, she was dead after that first bullet struck."

Mr. Robinette said the Crown did not prove Kilbon guilty of murder.

Must Prove Wrongful Act

"The Crown has to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused committed a wrongful act and that because of a wrongful act her death resulted," said Mr. Robinette. "You have heard the medical evidence and the Crown has failed to establish its case."

The case is expected to go to the jury, composed largely of farmers, late today, after addresses by crown counsel Lorne Kingsiding Judge.

Dr. Doyle said the stomach wound Mrs. Kilbon inflicted on herself "would have proceeded to the aorta, a main blood vessel.

"Could one tell which wound caused death?" asked Mr. Justice Wells, presiding at the murder trial of Kilbon.

"An examination would not tell exactly which wound caused death if I would say the wound in the aorta was pierced the patient was medically dead," said Dr. Doyle.

"One final beat of the heart would be sufficient to produce the blood found in the lungs."

Crown Attorney Harry Deyman asked: "Would the second (head) wound hasten her death?"

Dr. Doyle said it would.

Admits Firing Shot

Kilbon, 56-year-old retired engineer, was quoted Tuesday as saying he fired a shot into his wife's head to "finish her" because he could not bear to see the agony caused by the stomach wound.

A policeman said Kilbon told him after he was arrested:

Year She Thought Would be Her Last Is Happiest and Healthiest for Widow

By WILLIAM PEART

Oklahoma City, March 22 — (AP)—Death was a constant guest in Mrs. Heart's alive today, and livin' is mighty fine.

The $10,000" the unidentified Oklahoman won when rationed Oklahoma last March for the year doctors said would be her last is almost gone.

But . . .

"I was ready to give up before," says the woman who was told a brain condition would kill her in 12 months, "but I'm happier now."

Mrs. Heart says her health is better, and she's convinced she has a future.

Mrs. Heart says she gave hundreds of dollars away. Now for the money, though, went to persons who wrote her for financial aid.

The letters — some 30,000 of them—came in the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman after she appeared at the newspaper office, told her story, and frankly asked for help.

Mrs. Heart said she had been so occupied with making money that she hadn't learned how to spend it. And she wanted the year which was to be her final one "completely enjoyable."

The newspaper, pledged to secrecy, agreed to read the readers for advice.

"I have filled a book with notes I took from those letters," she says. "Especially the letters from those people who have no reason to give up hope. And from people who have a long past the time they were given to die."

Mrs. Heart has travelled. Later she sought additional medical advice. "I've a self-confidence that I never had before in my life," Mrs. Heart says.

Mrs. Heart doesn't want her identity known.

"Because," she says, "I'm afraid that would tear down everything I've been able to build up."

BILL INTRODUCED TO LEGALIZE SUNDAY SPORT

Toronto, March 22 —(CP) — Three government bills of wide interest were introduced in the Ontario Legislature Tuesday, before the House in a lengthy night session, mostly routine or organizational estimates.

One government measure provides for Sunday sport in municipalities which register approval by a straight majority in a plebiscite of municipal voters. Toronto and Windsor have already approved Sunday sport in such votes.

Another bill dissolves the injunction which was to become effective April 15 to prevent waste disposal in the Spanish River from the Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Company's plant, Espanola. The company had contended that the injunction was made effective it would be forced to close down.

The third government measure establishes an Ontario racing commission out of not less than three and not more than seven members. The commission will have authority to issue or revoke licences of race-track operators, owners, drivers, jockeys, valets, exercise boys, tradesmen and others.

Importance of Resources Outlined by Minister to Members of Kiwanis Club

HON. R. H. WINTERS

Minister of Resources and Development, who was principal speaker at the Kiwanis luncheon on Tuesday.

"In many cases resources development may necessitate joint Federal and Provincial action and as in the past the Federal Government stands ready to participate actively with Provincial Governments and other groups interested in the full development of such resources," said Hon. Robert H. Winters, Minister of Resources and Development, in speaking to a luncheon meeting of the Kiwanis Club held at Kiwanis Centre on Tuesday.

In attendance were the presidents of the service clubs of the city, His Worship Mayor H. J. Allin, members of the City Council, Board of Education, Chamber of Commerce, members of the Judiciary and other notables and they were entertained by addresses on the importance of the resources of this country and the methods that is being employed to guard these resources for the generations yet unborn.

The speaker dealt very briefly with the trans-Canada trans-Canada highway, both of which projects come under his administration, but he did state that the projects were being approached "on the basis" of the Federal and Provincial Governments.

The Common Denominator

Quoting from a book on wood the speaker stated that wood could be the common denominator for the conservation of many different commodities as automobiles, ships, railroad ties and houses and thus as a barometer of well-being. He pointed out that the consumption of wood is not just the proximity of a forest because British consumption in wood is three times that of Poland.

The speaker discussed the world resources problem showing that a higher standard of living obviously means a greater demand on the natural resources, and that it becomes necessary to find ways and means to develop the country's forests, soil and water resources are renewable if properly treated," said Mr. Winters.

He explained that forest conservation has been dealt with water conservation because well managed forests insure a continued supply of wood and their presence regulates the flow of water, maintaining the level of the underground water table and by minimizing the danger of periodic floods, help to prevent the erosion of the soil. The forests provide protection for wild life, recreational facilities and have an important influence on the climate.

"The misuse of our forests in days gone by has been an important contributor to the problems which now face us in the fields of soil and water resources," said the speaker. Mr. Winters showed how Canada's natural resources had become a world factor because Canada leads all other countries in nickel, asbestos and platinum and stands second in the output of zinc, gold, radium and uranium and third in the production of copper and silver.

Story Somewhat Similar

"In forestry the story is somewhat similar," stated Mr. Winters. "In 1947 Canada produced about six per cent of the world's fuel wood, 10 per cent of the saw logs and almost 30 per cent of the pulp wood and 60 per cent of the newsprint. In exports, Canada leads the world in lumber. In addition to all this, Canada is extremely well blessed with water power resources, being particularly fortunate in that these are situated in what is termed "acute fuel zones".

Turning to the housing problem, Mr. Winters told of his trip to all the provinces to deal with housing and the trans-Canada highway and how he had found all the premiers much interested in Canadian development, and sincere in their wishes to assist in every way possible for the full development of these projects.

Interested In Report

The speaker stated that the Federal Government was very much interested in the report tabled in the Ontario Legislature on resources development and conservation because encouraged by the positive and constructive way the problem has been approached. He cited a number of cases where joint Federal and Provincial action had reclaimed many areas in the Dominion. He stated he was very proud of the action of the Federal and Provincial Governments in carrying out the provisions of the Canada-Ontario Act.

Mr. Winters was introduced by Fraser Fulton, chairman of the program committee, Kiwanis appreciation being expressed in a witty vein by T. L. Moore. The singing commercial was one of the best that has been given and was dedicated to Stu Connelly and the awarding of the trophy went to Ian the new school. Ted Schwab chose as his choir, members of the club who were on different sides of the fence when the question was discussed, this causing a novel deal of merriment and good natured banter.

Seven-Year-Old Boy Narrowly Escapes Drowning

Dropping through the honeycombed ice as he attempted to cross the Moira River at the C. P. R. railroad bridge, seven-year-old Terry Sherrington, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. G. Pennylegion, 134 Victoria Ave., narrowly escaped drowning Tuesday evening.

The lad dropped through the ice into seven or eight feet of water but was rescued by quick thinking action on the part of Gordon Sanford, Water Street, who had seen the lad playing near the river bank. After he was pulled from the water the lad was taken home in the police cruiser, where he was found not to have suffered any ill effects from his icy ducking.

The Pennylegion boy had been playing on the west side of the river with two Sanford boys when Mr. Sanford noticed he suddenly disappeared. Just then Ralph Sanford, 11, eldest Sanford son, saw the boy disappear through the ice.

Without regard to personal safety the two men started over after the boy and before he had gone through and Mr. Sanford succeeded in pulling him to safety. The boy went through the ice at the second bridge pier from the east side on the deepest part of the river.

"I wouldn't take considerable money and go across the ice there today," stated Mr. Sanford, "but you just don't think of your own danger in the emergency."

On the perjury charge Wood was sentenced to five years in penitentiary, while the three men who had given false evidence were given one month in jail.

Parcel Boxes Used by Children For Playthings

Parcel boxes owned by the postal department are placed in the residential sections of the city for the convenience of residents and not merely as playthings for children.

But children in the Bridge St., East and Herchmer Blvd. area apparently consider the parcel box at the above intersection as fair game. At any rate the post office parcel collector has on several occasions found the box to be upset and half filled with snow. Police stated that children were believed responsible.

Postmaster J. C. Waddell stated today that if molestation of the box continues it will be necessary to remove the parcel box from the intersection.

H.C. Stoliker Draws Horse On Grand National Race

Harry C. Stoliker, Cannifton Road, is not superstitious, but he is keeping his fingers crossed hoping that his good luck stays with him for Saturday.

Yesterday Mr. Stoliker, an employee of the Canadian National Railways in the local shops, was informed that he had drawn a horse in the Army and Navy sweepstakes on the Grand National steeplechase to be run at Liverpool, England, on Saturday. Mr. Stoliker drew the horse Atomic.

"I haven't won anything yet," replied Mr. Stoliker when asked what he would do with the money if his horse came through. Mr. Stoliker was not sure what his winnings would be if his horse won but it was learned this would be in the neighborhood of $35,000. In any event Mr. Stoliker stands to win close to $500 for drawing a horse.

Although Mr. Stoliker was not placing too many hopes on winning, he intimated the money would come in handy in completing the home which he had commenced to build some years ago. Father of six sons, Mr. Stoliker lost his wife last autumn.

ROOSEVELT PAPERS OPENED

Something unprecedented in history has been brought to the attention of a world that holds in loving memory the life and service of the late President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who passed suddenly when the march of victory had begun in the spring of 1945. He did not live to see the fruits of his devotion but his last thoughts must have been profoundly satisfying to himself as he saw in his mind's eye the approaching collapse of the forces of tyranny.

This week's event was the opening of the great bulk of five million Presidential papers of Franklin Delano Roosevelt to researchers, scholars and the writers of history. The wealth of fact which these papers contain and the light they throw upon the course of events of today, must make them precious to all Americans and all lovers of liberty.

Historians of this age have the facts of world history of their time in so many documents that it makes one wonder how the history of ancient classical times could be written. Read the prehistoric state of civilization which preceded them would have been painted if historians succeeded in giving so satisfactory a picture of the world in those ages so long ago. In such a pile as this of Presidential papers there will be records that reveal the men of this day and age and the events of the time as they were nevermore marvellously revealed of any generation. The documents will be a storehouse for future study of the man Roosevelt and his associates in the government and they will be quoted in years far in the future.

Prominent among men of this age will be in the future the great figure of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, man and president.

The man whose papers run into the millions was at the age of 11 years doing some writing — in school. There is a slip of paper showing one of the early efforts of the man who as a boy was learning to write. In the desk of an author on Hudson River Valley estate Whatever the ambition and ideal of the 11-year-old lad then going to school may have been, he could not have foreseen that in the course of his life there would be gathered such a mountain of papers of importance dealing with his public life and times.

LOOKING FORWARD

There is a time of the year when rain is welcome and that is in the early days of spring, if only to wash away some of the grime which adheres to the decaying ice and the disappearing snowbanks.

The season of the spring rains is coming nearer and then there will be the signs of reviving life in the earth and also in the hearts of men.

However between that time of gentle spring rains and now hangs a curtain of uncertainty just what nature is going to do. It must not be forgotten that the remnant of March is slowly shrinking but who can tell what may happen in this time? The past winter and spring months have been running contrary to the nature of things. There were rains in plenty at Christmastide. That makes it difficult to say whether there will be a bluesterous lion-like exit of this month.

But whichever the rains come they will be welcome as heralds of growth and beauty. They will forestall the spring flowers and promise the advent of the birds which have been visiting down in the deep South or even in the northern parts of South America.

Rain brings down nourishment for the flowers-to-be, it makes a sound pleasant to the ear. With it the symphony of the new season begins and in due time come the birds and flowers.

To the gardener and farmer these are days of looking forward and of rich meaning and promise of another year of growth in the rich earth which with its wondrous chemistry creates the substance of life.

But the month is not yet out. Nature holds the secret whether there will be boisterous storms to rock the closing days and nights of March to sleep for another year. Will March go out like the lamb or the lion? Nature will have much guessing right up to the last.

But March cannot this year rebuild the ice chains which held the rivers in check. That would be against nature. And human beings are glad that now the danger of floods is past as winter has quietly retreated from this beautiful earth.

Strong reasons make strong actions.—Shakespeare.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST
(Copyright, 1950, Edgar A. Guest)

WHAT MAN SHOULD PROMISE

Don't say to the maiden you hope to win
You'll dream her in silk when your ship comes in.
Or promise like that many men fall short.
The ship with the silk may not come to port.

It is better to vow: "I will try
To be true,
I'll hang up my coat if you'll marry me.
I'll wipe my feet when I reach the door,
And I won't leave things on the parlor floor,

"I'll be on time for the meals you get,
And I promise I won't leave a room upset.
Whenever we happen late hours to keep
I'll get my breakfast and eat you sleep."

Forget the ship that may not get in
With the costly fabric the silk sails spin.
Just promise the things you can do and will
As a clincher: "I'll never be like your dad."

PITCHING HORSESHOES

By Billy Rose

THE RAVE AND RAZZ DEPARTMENT

Here's a list of my current likes and loathings, and as per usual each item is graded in terms of the old backlot game of horseshoe pitching — a "ringer" for the perfect pitch, "leaner" for the so-so and "miss" for the so-what.

* * *

"Ringer" — Shirley Booth in "Come Back Little Sheba."

For my money and mores, this is the most skillful acting job since Laurette Taylor set the town on its tear ducts in "The Glass Menagerie."

The standout dramatic performance of this fine comedienne once again confirms what Charlie Chaplin proved long ago —the laugh and the tear are a split-second apart.

"Ringer"—Bob Sylvester's newspaper novel, "The Second Oldest Profession."

I recommend this book to anyone who has ever had a yen to chase a fire engine or solve a murder before the cops get to the body. It purports to be about things something I've always suspected—that the most interesting people in the newspapers get to meet are other newspapermen.

"Ringer" — Dorothy Field's lyrics for the new musical "Arms and the Girl."

By, large and in the main, I liked this show. It's the first thing that really hit me where I used to make a living was the illegal literary use of "Pop Goes the Weasel" as carefully turned out as a Paul Revere tune could be. Also the best June-mooning since Oscar Hammerstein's job for "South Pacific."

"Ringer" — Ferenc Molnar's new book, "Companion in Berlin."

This 363-page ode to the refugee girl who accompanied the Hungarian playwright into exile is one of the most touching love stories ever written from the heart. It isn't the sort of confessional we've come to expect from the clothes-horse Peyton Places. In its way it's as memorable as anything he ever set his gifted pen to.

"Leaner" — The Bergman-Rossellini opus, "Stromboli"

Despite a zillion dollars worth of free publicity, the Swedish siren to Mr. Lasted only seven days at the Criterion Theatre on Broadway. Yet, day and date with its closing, a quiet but ingratiating little movie called "Bell Book" went into its 70th week at the near-by Lee and Jake,

"Miss" — The Justice Department's antitrust suit against the Shuberts.

Although I'm no special chum buddy of the fabled threesome, Lee and Jake, I'd like to get it into the record that in 25 years of doing business with them they've never reneged on a contract or pitched a curve. They've tried to make the best deals they can, but so do I and so does your wife when she buys the week-end pot roast.

The Government's claim that the Brothers are trying to oonts out their competition in New York is a lot of nassfras—and I figure to know because, along with ten other independent theatre owners, I'm the competition. The Shuberts may have booked "South Pacific," but "Mr. Roberts" is playing a house controlled by Howard Cullman, and "Gentlemen Prefer You-Know-What" is playing the theatre that you-know-who built for them.

The Government further alleges that the Shuberts refuse to make their out-of-town theatres available to shows that play in-between houses in New York. Mebbe so, but I ain't heard tell of it. "Kiss Me Kate," "Guys and Dolls" and "Brigadoon" played for me before they toured the United States. Even "Oklahoma!" and "Carousel" when I get back and begin knocking about—I mean traipsing about the country. If any reader doubts it, as a hint that I want lecture engagements, he or she is wrong. I'm taken. My prayer is that heaven will forgive me for lectures I have delivered in the past.

While my medical friends advise me to lean more, I'm with the brass specialists (my term for a medical merchandiser who sells himself out as a "specialist" but takes all the lessons in a correspondence school under the general practitioners of the community) that the clinic is a good short term for the dinky little doctors who haven't the courage to go practice under their own name but instead set up in business under the name of the Appendunk Clinic —which impresses the Yankee suckers—express it in Wall Street terms. They mention precisely what they're going to operate on. Maybe that's where I shall end up.

One thing I wish to say, however, is that for all of my unorthodox ways and my outrageous teachings, I have never betrayed the confidence of a physician, never assume physicians or any other correspondents who write me have something to say to me, favorable or unfavorable, that I am not amenable to the ordinary amenities.

Personal Health Talks

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

(Signed letters pertaining to personal health and hygiene, not to disease diagnosis or treatment will be answered by Dr. Brady if a stamped self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Letter should be brief and written in ink. Owing to the large number of letters received only a few can be answered here. No reply can be made to queries not conforming to instructions. Address Dr. William Brady, care of this newspaper.)

AN APPEAL TO MY MEDICAL COLLEAGUES

It may well be, and indeed I hope so, that, situated as I am, being in the midst of the most frightening concentration of brass specialists and clinic racketeers in the country, I get an unfavorable impression of the state of the profession. Some of my medical friends, that is, real doctors (I like to pretend that several real doctors still think kindly of me), tell me things are not so bad as I think, particularly in the smaller cities and villages throughout the United States and Canada. When I reply that I certainly hope so, they answer that my medicine is still a noble profession and they advise me to travel and get a clearer view of the way real doctors behave.

By this my colleagues mean that I should get about the country and see for myself what the real doctors are doing. That is good advice, I suppose. But I'm taking it in a roundabout way—as I want to have a good look at the real doctors of South America, South Africa and Europe first. If I find them with their standards of medicine in consonance with the war or from the same ugly cause as that which inspired the integrity of American medicine, I'll lower my professional sights when I get back and begin knocking about—I mean traipsing about the country. If any reader doubts it as a hint that I want lecture engagements, he or she is wrong. I'm taken. My prayer is that heaven will forgive me for lectures I have delivered in the past.

While my medical friends advise me to lean more, I'm with the brass specialists (my term for a medical merchandiser who sells himself out as a "specialist" but takes all the lessons in a correspondence school under the general practitioners of the community) that the clinic is a good short term for the dinky little doctors who haven't the courage to go practice under their own name but instead set up in business under the name of the Appendunk Clinic —which impresses the Yankee suckers—express it in Wall Street terms. They mention precisely what they're going to operate on. Maybe that's where I shall end up.

My medical friends, if I may again use the plural, never hesitate to tell me in very expressive language when they think I am wrong. Sometimes I go red in the face and admit that I pulled a boner. Sometimes I tell them to go to hell in a hack. Every business that is strictly between ourselves.

Physicians of all ranks or degrees who notice what they believe to be wrong in this column owe it to the public welfare to tell me so—even if it is only a brief message by postcard. By registering his or her dissent or protest in this way the physician may not change my mind right away, but believe me, I have the utmost respect for sincerity of opinion, whether it conforms with my own or not.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Syphilis

It is possible for one to be infected with syphilis without the germ being present in the blood? (Mrs. C. B. G.)

Answer—Yes. The "germ" disease syphilis is circulating blood within a period of from a few weeks to several months. It is then localized and the germ in syphilitic lesions after that time also.

Her Daughter Shaves

Shocked to discover that my daughter shaves her face regularly. She says everybody does. Will this make the growth heavier as in men. If she stopped would the "fuzz" be worse than it was originally. (Mrs. H. C.W.)

Answer—Shaving regularly will coarsen the hair. Many women are naturally subject to some extent. Depilatories have some value, temporarily, but seem to irritate the delicate skin about the face. Electrolysis is tedious and perhaps most effective treatment at this time. I would warn you against the dangers of shaving which is being given in some beauty emporiums under the guise of beauty culture. You should study the case from the standpoint of cosmetics and not doubt that the facial hair would revert to the "fuzz" stage if shaving stopped now.

Ordinances re Childbirth

My wife would like to have me present at the birth of our child but the hospital authorities say that special permission would have to be obtained on account of a ordinance prohibiting it. (R. H. G.)

Answer—There is no such ordinance in your city. If the doctor in charge objects you will let him where you may apply for the special permission. This will probably eliminate the doctor, but it answers your question.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

OLD AGE

You cannot buy old age at any price. You have to wait until it appears. From youth up, however, it is on its way, awaiting expenings.

In the notebooks of Leonardo da Vinci is seen across the page a paragraph: "In youth acquire that which may require you for the deprivations of old age," and you are mindful that old age has wisdom for you. You will so exert yourself in youth that your old age will not lack sustenance."

"Old age," says Ella Wheeler, poorn of Browning's—"Rabbi Ben Ezra" in it you will find that familiar verse:

"Grow old along with me!
The best is yet to be."

The best of life, for which the first was made."

It is inspiring to look upon the great tree, with its expanding foliage, its branches outward and upward, toward the sun — lover of all life. Some trees, rooted in a town or village, always appear to me as an evidence of immortal grandeur. How bleak and uninviting without them! How we look with pride upon those human beings, men and women, who have weathered life and proved its worth. We listen to those who have wrestled with experience, and accumulated rare wisdom.

It was while nearing the end of the third century that Marcus Aurelius wrote his immortal "Thoughts," that for centuries was his life's work—for he died millions. Said one writer: "—and in reading his life one realizes that it was Thomas Gainsborough, in addition to his quiet rectory at Rotherthite, considered this (his translation of the Iliad) the best preparation for approaching death." Aurelius died March 17, 180 A.D., in his sixtieth year.

There is an atmosphere of completeness to old age, in every case where its fore-running years have been filled with a sense of privilege and strife, matured in useful-ness, crowned with an ever-triumphant faith in God and Nature's rewards.

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

"It isn't the money: it's the work I like," they say.
Whenever you hear this statement, smile. For 99 times out of about 100, you are entitled to smile. A shrewd old family doctor of my acquaintance has made this crack about money and principles one of his life-long hobbies. Whenever he hears it, he either doubles over with laughter, in order to observe principles vanish into thin air.

For instance, if a man sincerely refuses to pay somebody for services rendered, and is involved, the lawyer arranges a settlement for $50, and then obtains $100 for his services with which his client pays up.

But on the other hand, where a client refuses to accept $100 on a matter of principle, the lawyer gets it for the fee offer increased to $200. And that settles it.

Now, this old lawyer is not cynical. He does not believe that principles are for sale. He merely doubts that the average human being's principles are very deep-rooted.

"Principles are a growth," he says. "They are planted and nurtured by education, training and religious up-bringing. They are not inserted, like a false tooth or a bone graft. They have to grow into a man's very nature. And being growths, they have to take root. And everything depends on the character of the soil in which the roots strike.

"I've had years of law practice, I have encountered only two people who had planted their principles to ruin them. And not twenty more who carried their principles so that they did them serious injury. But in the same breath, I have not met twenty others who did not believe that their principles governed their every act.

Strength for the Day

WAS HE THE ONLY PRACTICAL MAN

As you have read the Bible you have probably said to yourself have grave doubts as to whether I would have been to live at the time of Jesus, to have seen Him to have heard His words, to have witnessed His mighty miracles, to have been known as one of His disciples."

Personally I am glad I was not living at that time, because I have grave doubts as to whether I would have been on the side of Jesus and His disciples or against them. Jesus was so impractical. He was meek in a world where might and force of Rome ruled all. He charged men to love their enemies and when struck on one cheek to turn the other. He scorned the leaders of thought in His day, the people in position, the respectable folk.

Would you have sided with Him? Well, we are all lucky that we did not have to make that decision. It is a matter of faith, how many today side with Jesus and His disciples? Ask yourself that question and you may be believe the gospel of Christ can be practical in the modern world practical world. The whole Christian enterprise was a thing so big and so across the centuries we view its inception with astonishment.

Yet time has been dated from this Nazarene. Not that is how God He will prove to be the only practical person that humanity has produced in its history.

Union Speakers Offer Support To Strikers

Trenton —(Special) — Guest speakers at the union meeting of the Local 105, Textile Workers Union (AFL) held in the Trenton Town Hall Tuesday night were, Neville Hamblin, United Electrical Workers organizer, J. Bedell, president of Local 533 U. E. union of Belleville, Bert Orr, president of the Paper Makers Union of Glenn Miller and George Brinklow, president of Local 715 of the Boot and Shoe Workers Union, Batawa.

All of the speakers said that the unions they represented were behind the Trenton textile workers one hundred percent in their dispute with the Downs-Coulter Co. Commenting on the closing of the plant by the management, Mr. Hamblin said, "it is an acknowledgment of defeat on the part of the company to close the plant. When every other method has failed to bring the union to their knees, the management tries to scare them by closing the plant.

Asked to Sign Cards

U.T.W.A. organizer Val Bjarnason said that several U.T.W.A. A.F. of L. members in Trenton had been approached by the C.I.O. Textile union asking them to sign cards saying that they no longer wanted to remain with the A.F. of L. but wanted to join the C.I.O. Mr. Bjarnason said that some of the strikers had signed but he claimed that their signatures had been obtained under false pretences, and high-pressure tactics.

Mr. Bjarnason said that Mr. Daley, Minister of Labor, thought that the Trenton union's proposal to the management was very fair and that he would contact the Downs-Coulter Company in an attempt to re-open negotiations.

Motion Passed

A motion was passed by the strikers last night, stating:

1. "That this meeting condemn the raiding strike breaking activities of the C.I.O. Textile union and brand the C.I.O. Textile union as a company union.

2. "That this meeting re-affirm its confidence in and support of the U.T.W.A.—A.F. of L.

3. "That they call on the Downs-Coulter to settle the strike on the basis of the last offer, (5 cents an hour increase and the difference put to arbitration.)

The motion was carried unanimously.

A letter received from the Trenton and District Trades and Labor Council read as follows: "In accordance with motion passed at the last regular meeting of this Trades and Labor Council, I am enclosing a cheque as a gesture of goodwill and best wishes of Local 105 U.T.W.A." Yours fraternally, H. S. Blakely, Sec. Treas. Trenton and District Trades and Labor Council.

MARIO ... in his distinctive feature about Food ... What's Cooking?

By the author of "THE FACE IN THE ASPIC"

"It's been many a century since people rode on beefsteaks. Before the age of scientific cattle breeding and blue ribbon steers, it was the custom to place a piece of meat beneath a horse's saddle. After a lengthy journey, the steak would be thoroughly tenderized.

Today there are a number of ways of softening meat sinews. It can be aged, that is, stored in special refrigerators from 2 to 8 weeks during which time the enzymes tenderize the meat. It can be treated with special tamps, or it can be put through a pounding and cutting machine.

Most of these methods are used to tenderize beef. To make veal tender, there is nothing better than slapping it with the side of a heavy meat cleaver.

Your butcher will do this for you when you order veal cutlets, veal steak or veal rolls. The latter are thin slices of veal, stuffed, rolled and then potted. They are sometimes called veal birds or paupiette of veal.

Because veal is a lean and rather dry meat, it needs a rich, moist stuffing and a smooth sauce.

Potted Veal Rolls. —Serves 4.

Order 1 1-2 pounds of leg of veal cut into 8 thin slices. Have your butcher pound meat with a cleaver so that slices are 3 by 5 inches or bigger.

Sprinkle veal on both sides with salt and pepper.

Place 2 strips of bacon cut into 1-2 inch squares in a small saucepan. Simmer bacon until fat begins to melt. Add 1-4 cup onion chopped fine and 1-4 cup green pepper chopped fine. Simmer slowly until onion turns yellow. Remove from flame. Add 1 cup white bread crumbs, 1 slightly beaten egg, 1-4 cup water, 1-4 teaspoon salt and 1-8 teaspoon pepper. Mix well.

Spread bread mixture over slices of veal. Roll up veal. Fasten with toothpicks.

Melt 2 tablespoons fat in a heavy saucepan. Brown veal on all sides. Throw off fat from pan. Add 1 can undiluted tomato soup, 1-2 cup water and 1-2 teaspoon chopped basil.

Place tight lid on saucepan. Simmer until veal is tender, approximately 1 hour. Place veal rolls on serving dish. Remove toothpicks. Pour sauce over veal.

Simple Weddings Are Disappearing Say Stylists

Toronto, March 22. (CP)—With the starting gun of another mating season about to be fired, here's a style note on present day wedding trends.

First, simple weddings attended by a few close friends are fast disappearing. Now 100 to 150 guests take in the average formal wedding at a cost to the bride and her family of $500 to $600 and at times plenty more.

Then evening weddings are becoming increasingly popular, especially in hot summer days.

A survey of last year's 11,000 weddings in Toronto shows the city's two largest bridal planning bureaus handled about one-third of them.

Largest single item is the catering, usually planned three months in advance of the day but depending on the season—earlier for a summertime wedding. For an average 150-guest spread, this item will total $2,000.

Church rentals in some cases are booked up to a year in advance for a Saturday wedding. Some weddings have run into thousands of dollars. There have been many $5,000 splashes in this city. Many are held by either bureau was a $40,000 splendor handled for an out-of-town customer.

But you don't have to follow the trend. Wedding authorities say you can have a simple informal ceremony with eight to ten guests for $50.

A Truly Original Design

By PEUNELLA WOOD

Most of the "original" dress designs really are, some more so than others. But it is the idea as well as the cut of this particular model above, which entitles it to its original label: It's the combination of a formal wedding gown you see here. It is the modern evening dress the bride keeps in her trousseau, after the ceremony is over.

The secret is a redingote of handsome silk satin brocade, beautifully embroidered and hand painted, classic in the most proper tradition for brides, which covers all of this model but the front of the tulle skirt, for the ceremony. The redingote and the coronet with veil may be laid away as heirlooms while the dress goes usefully social.

Unusual Fashions By Male Designers

Melbourne, Australia — (CP) —Men are becoming designers in Australia, where many ex-servicemen have invaded the fashion world.

Trained at technical colleges under the Commonwealth government's reconstruction training scheme, the men are now turning out some of the most unusual fashions ever seen in this country.

The principal of one of Melbourne's leading dressmaking schools, Dorothy Sander, said that she thinks men make better fashion designers than women, because they have a better color sense and know what lines of a woman's figure should be accentuated.

Georgette And Taffeta

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

AFTER a long absence georgette is well represented in important collections here and abroad. Pure silk georgette over matching navy blue taffeta is the fabric theme of this young and charming dress, an ideal choice for a happy afternoon. It has a boat neck and tiny little puffed sleeves that lend interest to the severe bodice. The skirt is box pleated below a contour belt that buckles in back and is enlivened by three cabochon jewel toned stones in front.

Club Activities

ENERGETIC CLUB

The Energetic Club of Holloway Street Church have had three very interesting meetings lately. On March 3rd, the meeting took the form of a sleigh drive under the genial leaders Jean and Bill Townson. Those who did not go on the drive were entertained at the church with several interesting films. Games were played and refreshments were served later.

On March 11th, Jeanette and Ogzie Outindyke entertained for Queenie Meldrum who was leaving on a trip for England. Progressive euchre was enjoyed and a presentation was made to Queenie.

On March 17 the regular meeting took the form of a St. Patrick's party. After the worship service Mrs. Perking read the scripture, Grace Walter took the meditation and Mr. Perkins the prayer. There was also a short business session, after which the meeting was turned over to the group leaders, Archie and Ruth McMillan.

The following delightful program was enjoyed: solos by Frances Thompson; wee Jeanne Gray, and Mr. Ross Purchase; two readings by Mrs. Mary Walters; a trio consisting of Norm Meldrum at the piano Johnson Oram, guitarist, and Archie McMillan, violinist, dressed in suitable Irish costumes, played several numbers; community singing under the leadership of Mr. Ross Purchase brought this part of the meeting to a close.

A clever leaf contest paired off couples for supper and the meeting closed in the usual manner.

Fashion Flashes

BELLE OF THE BEACH, come Summer, is likely to be terry towelling. This fabric has been used for everything from shorts to skirts, from bags to boleros. Nice for after-swim wear is a knee-length hooded coat of white terry with big red coin dots.

ELEGANT ENSEMBLES, good for travel-light use, star in the collections. Black ribbed silk crepe is made up into what looks like a shagt, bat-wing-sleeved dress, the jacket being very snug with tiny rolled collar, and belted in black patent. When removed, the jacket discloses a strapless bodice of pink faille.

SOFTEN UP plain wool dresses with big white collars. A fichu collar of eyelet embroidered white pique, shoulder wide and waist deep does things for a simply fashioned, slim coat frock of gray worsted.

IT'S THE BIG YEAR for the shirtwaist blouse. Fine white handkerchief linen makes a blouse beauty, the front panel stitched below a plain little collar. Rhinestone button studs for closing, and rhinestone links for the French cuffs.

SOMETHING APART from the usual in after-dark fur wraps is a full length trench coat made of gray-dyed ermine.

FAVORITE among the hats is the little bonnet with a side slant. Nice when interpreted in white petitpoint straw, with a double border of crocheted white flowers to soften and accentuate the line. Wired corded loops of emerald green velvet add height and color interest.

GOOD MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Diamond wedding anniversary plans

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

We are to celebrate our grandparents' diamond wedding anniversary next month. We are to give a dinner in a private suite of a large hotel here. There will be an orchestra to play before and during dinner.

1. Because of our grandparents' age, the dinner is to be given at two o'clock on a Sunday . . . rather than in the evening, when they might get too fatigued by this festivity. How soon before the dinner should we arrive at the hotel?

2. Is it proper to have place cards, and, if so, who should arrange them?

3. One of my brothers has suggested that we open the dinner by singing a favorite song of our grandparents, and at the end of the dinner sing another of their favorites. Do you think this would be proper? If so, should we ask our grandparents to suggest the songs, or have this idea a surprise for them?

Sara L.

1. Your grandparents, the guests of honor, and the members of the family who are arranging the details of the dinner should arrive about a half hour before the hour set for the dinner. (Someone, probably the eldest son, should lovingly and ceremoniously "escort" your grandparents to the hotel.) There should be enough time allowed to get wraps off, see to last-minute arrangements, and decide on where your grandparents will stand (or sit, if this is thought wiser) to receive the guests. Also there are usually "early birds" arriving at such an important festivity, and this time-leeway allows for "receiving" them.

2. Please do have place cards . . . they are appropriate and particularly convenient for such an important occasion. I suggest you consider having small white place cards with the gold edges (available at stationers) and write the names of the guests in gold ink. The members of the family who are arranging the dinner should consult together as to the suitable seating-arrangements. At a wedding anniversary dinner, the "bride" and "bridegroom" sit side by side, the bride at the right of the bridegroom. The so-important anniversary cake may be placed in front of them, or, as the centrepiece of their table, to be placed in front of them later, when your grandmother ceremoniously cuts the first piece of the cake and shares it with your grandfather . . . as undoubtedly they did at the original wedding reception.

3. A grand and glorious idea . . . to have "their" favorite songs sung. Very often an orchestra plays "Here Comes the Bride" as the bride and groom go toward their places at the head table. And very often "Auld Lang Syne" is sung at the end of the dinner. But you may prefer to consult with your grandparents about the best choice . . . although it would be nice if it could be a gala surprise!

Should wear hat

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A club is giving a "Silver Tea" at the home of one of the club members. From three to six o'clock. I have been asked to pour tea from four to five o'clock. There will be several others who will help in performing this service. I am going to wear a black crepe dress, street-length, with dusty-pink collar and necklace. Should I wear a hat and keep it on all during the tea-party?

Elizabeth

Generally the "decorative ladies" who are asked to pour at a tea wear their hats all during the tea party, just as all other guests do. It is usually only the hostess giving a party in her own home who does not wear a hat.

Goodlooking Tweed Suit

By ERUNELLA WOOD

THE BAGGY look continues to be the banished among tweed suits, the newer, thinner weaves taking to slim tailoring which gives women a trim line.

This far from expensive model is a case in hand ,shaped to the waist, without bulky lapels and pleats, pocketed flatly, and slim of skirt.

Buttons are self covered, and so is the belt which is a leather strip to cinch between two metal buckles. Pullovers or shirts go well with the suit.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMIESON

Get out and walk.

Too many women are fair weather girls. They like to be hot house plants, but that doesn't mean that they'll look blooming. They will be more likely to look as if they had been blanched in a cellar—wane, pale, no home grown roses in their cheeks. No go. No ginger in their veins. Usually they are shallow breathers, which means that circulation is slow moving. Let them put on their seven league boots, pump oxygen into their lungs, and chuck the rouge compact out of the window.

If you are the boss of the domestic works, you can manage to get a little outdoor exercise each day. The family cherub has to have his airing. Pack him in his go-cart and march. Not just around the block a few times, or to a nearby grocery, but a mile or two. You'll be all the better for it.

The career girl, especially one who sits all day at desk or typewriter, must have a certain amount of outdoor recreation. If she doesn't get it she will be the victim of chair defects—thickened hips and thighs. Considering how little walking women do, it is no wonder they don't lose the use of their legs. Many a thin and slim figure is the penalty paid for laziness.

Activity is a law of life. Breathe in the fresh air and make your lungs healthy. Healthy vitality in a woman can be truly efficient, look her best or be blessed with an always cheerful disposition.

Shining Success

By ALICE ALDEN

THE SHINING success of the new season is our old friend, patent leather, back with us more gleaming and more supple than before. This pretty, well-mannered shirtwaist type dress, so good for smart daytime wear, is in yellow and black challis. The wide, curved belt of black patent leather subtly suggests the new waistline. Complementing the belt is a neat pair of black patent leather shoes with white stitching on the vamp.

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

About teen-agers in love

"What does a teen-ager have to do or say to convince a person like you that we can be very much in love?" is the question which leads off one of my letters.

The girl who signs this one tells me that she and the boy to whom she is engaged have been close friends since the age of 13.

"Eventually," she says, "we began to go pretty steady. We both had other dates, and we both met a lot of other girls and boys, but we always came back to each other. Now we are engaged to be married. We are going to work a couple of years and save for our home and future before we are married.

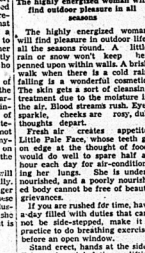
"Now can you say we are not in love? Can you possibly say that we are just a couple of silly teen-agers who don't know what love is? I'll admit some teen-agers do build themselves up for a big letdown, but I know I haven't. Therefore, I think there are a few exceptions."

If this girl had been reading my column consistently, she probably would not have written me this letter. For most of what she says shows clearly that she has completely misunderstood my real position on the subject of marriage between teen-agers. Let me try and set her straight.

Take, for instance, the three-fold fact that she is apparently 19 years old at this time; that she doesn't plan to be married until she is at least 21; and that the relationship between herself and the boy to whom she is now engaged has developed over a long period of time.

Now while a girl of 19 is still, of course, technically in her teens, she is so close to being out of them that she can hardly be classified with the true teen-agers, as that term is usually understood. By the time a girl reaches 19 years of age I think we assume that she has passed through the adolescent phase of "puppy love" and gained a little emotional stability. My objection to marriage between real teen-agers is that most boys and girls in that group are in the throes of the "puppy love" stage of growth and consequently not capable of taking a mature view of the responsibilities of marriage. I can see no objection whatever to an engagement at 19, particularly if two years are to elapse before marriage, giving both sides ample time to make reasonably sure of their feelings. Moreover, a relationship that has developed over six years presents an entirely different situation from that in which a young boy and a young girl decide they want to marry after knowing each other for five or six months, as is frequently the case with teen-agers who write me on this subject.

Failing is a wonderful cosmetic. The skin gets a sort of cleansing treatment due to the moisture in the air. Blood streams rush. Eyes sparkle, cheeks are rosy, dull thoughts depart.



Fresh air creates appetite. Little Pale Face, who nose teth go on edge at the thought of food, would do well to spare half an hour each day for air-conditioning her lungs. She is under nourished, and a poorly nourished body cannot be free of beauty grievances.

If you are rushed for time, have a-day filled with duties that cannot be side-stepped, make it a practice to do breathing exercises before an open window.

Stand erect, hands at the sides. Take a deep inhalation, lifting your hands slowly above your head, expanding the chest. Hold your breath while you count ten. Exhale while the hands are being lowered.

MUST REMOVE SIGNS

Toronto, March 21. (CP)—City Council Tuesday decided that all over-hanging signs on downtown Yonge Street must be removed by Dec. 31, 1951. The vote climaxed a long controversy that started when signs in some downtown sections of the main thoroughfare were removed temporarily during construction of the north-south subway.

Femininity No Bar In Insurance Job

Montreal — (CP) — A young Chinese woman is finding that being a woman doesn't seem much of a bar to a successful career selling insurance.

Eileen Hum is attractive and young—she's in her mid-20s. Interviewed at the annual sales meeting of her insurance company, she had a word to say about women's place in the insurance business.

Femininity, said Miss Hum, certainly doesn't hurt my prospects."

Furthermore, she has found that men are the best prospects for insurance sales. So far she has not written insurance for a single woman. But being a salesman and keeping chic is a difficult combination.

"I do an awful lot of walking, so I have to wear flat shoes with sponge soles. Not very glamorous. And my usual costume is a plain business suit and a trench coat."

Secretary at First

After graduating from a commercial high school in Montreal, Miss Hum spent seven years pounding a typewriter and taking dictation before she found herself in a position to go into business. She has been selling insurance now for only two months but in that time she has charmed more than the average amount of business out of her clients.

The work of underwriting people's futures is "stimulating and exciting" and she can't understand why more women haven't gone into the same business.

"This is a perfect business for women," she said. "It is one place they can use their natural gifts for tact and sympathy."

Miss Hum's father doesn't think it wrong that she should be on her own, making her own way in the business world.

"My father has always been interested in social work in Montreal," Miss Hum said, "and he believes I am carrying on by helping people."

Africa's Women Defy Tradition to Get Equality

Nsoga, Tanganyika — (CP) — African women are fighting their own battles to gain emancipation from the age-old tribal tradition of female inferiority. British colonial administrators have records of many women who made their way from the bush to become nurses, lawyers and teachers, helping their fellow-women and at the same time making their contribution to improving African life.

Leah George, who was in her 40s when she decided to become a nurse, is typical of such African women.

After spending months teaching hygiene and treating women in isolated villages, she heard there was a course for midwives in Uganda, many miles to the north. Before she could take the three-year course, she had to learn Luganda, the language used in the classes.

She completed the course and came to Nsoga as a qualified nurse. In this lonely settlement in the flat bushland of western Tanganyika there are a few government offices, a school and a maternity hospital where Leah George has worked for 10 years.

It was hard work, for the wards were always crowded with cases of hookworm and malaria and women walked 15 and 20 miles to have their confinement at the hospital.

The story of Leah George is unusual, even by western standards but in Africa where women are only just beginning to emerge from centuries of ignorance and subjugation it is a remarkable achievement.

The old traditions still remain in many places. No respectable girl can remain unmarried; childless women are rejected as outcasts; wives are still treated as chattels, married at an early age and inherited by their husband's brother if they become widows.

Yet records in the 14 African territories administered by British show that these traditions have been successfully defied by a number of African women.

Sierra Leone's Dr. Susan Ofori-Atta graduated as a surgeon from Edinburgh University and returned to become the first woman doctor in the Gold Coast.

Another brilliant African, Stella Thomas, took her bar examinations in London and went back to start a law practice in Nigeria. Now in her early 30s she is Supreme Court commissioner and an magistrate of Lagos, capital city of Nigeria, she has powers of jurisdiction over 70,000 Africans and Europeans.

At present the number of such women with professional careers remains small. Education of girls has lagg-I behind education of boys. The custom of early marriage has retarded co-educational progress in Africa, and with a few unmarried women there is a corresponding shortage of teachers, nurses and welfare workers.

But signs of emancipation are increasing. In the Sudan, free schools for girls started 20 years ago. In 1939 there were 42 such schools; today there are 60 with 10 more planned for next year. Women students may now enter Uganda's Makerere College in competitive examination with men.

Women education officers have been appointed in all African dependencies. These women, some of them African, are responsible for establishing new girls' schools, maternity clinics and welfare centres.

There are also indications the African people themselves are beginning to do away with the tradition of female inferiority. The Basutoland council has elected Regent Maniseo Seeiso a paramount chief, the first time a woman has entrusted with the government of the Basuto people over an area of 11,700 square miles.

U. S. SPUDS MARKETED IN CANADA

While U.S. government committees argue about the sale of Canadian potatoes in U. S. cities when their own home-grown product is rotting in carload lots, Canadian authorities point out that U.S. spuds are being marketed in Canada. Several carloads a week are imported into Vancouver and Toronto. New England potato growers have claimed their potato surplus has been due to Canadian imports and that the subsidy to U.S. potatoes has really meant a gift to Canadian producers. — Central Press Canadian.

RESCUER SINGED

Dagenham, Essex, England — (CP) — Kenneth Need, 23, who serves behind the counter in his father's vegetable store heard screams and found Michael Shanahan, 3, trapped in a blazing shed in an adjoining garden. He pulled the boy to safety then went back to work without a word—but with singed hair.

MORE PHONES NEEDED

London — (CP) — The General Post Office cannot keep up with the demand for telephone installations. Though it connected a record number of 716,822 in 1949 despite restrictions on manpower and materials, the growing demand has brought its backlog of unfinished orders up to 548,500.

Prisoners of Japs Show After-Effects

Sydney, Australia — (CP) — About 10,000 Australians spent much of the last war behind Japanese barbed wire —"behind bamboo" as they call it here.

They were mostly men of the ill-fated Australian Eighth Division, a hastily trained force caught in Singapore at the end of the Malayan campaign.

Now the Australian repatriation department—the government branch which looks after the veteran—is asking all those prisoners who returned to Australia to come in for another look-over.

Main object of the medical examination is to check for delayed effect of malnutrition, beri-beri, malaria, cholera, dysentery, tropical ulcers and typhus. Some recent cases had shown after-effects of these diseases although the men were fairly healthy when they came back in 1945.

If anything looks wrong with any of these ex-prisoners, the department will give them a check from head to toe and take them before a board which includes a doctor who was himself a prisoner of the Japanese. These doctors understand better than most what the men have suffered and understand also their mental outlook.

Of the many hundreds of men already examined, the survey shows that they compare favorably with anyone else who served in the Pacific. Officials say they are "remarkably free" from war neuroses.

Day or Night Burglary Will Still be Burglary

Ottawa, March 22—(CP)—Burglary will be just plain burglary 24 hours a day, under amendments to the Criminal Code now before the Senate.

This is one of the more important provisions of a government bill given first reading in the Upper Chamber last week and scheduled for second reading soon. The bill is designed to "tidy up" various sections of the code and eliminate "dead wood" from the statutes.

Under the present code, burglary by day is distinguished from burglary by night to such an extent that the former offence qualifies for a maximum penalty of 14 years while the latter is punishable with a life sentence.

Heavy Punishment

The new amendment will leave no such distinction. There will be just one offence—burglary—and it will be punishable with a maximum sentence of life imprisonment and de-lath.

The amendment also tightens up the laws respecting forgery. The present code lists some 40 different types of forgery, falling into three general classifications punishable by maximums of seven years, 14 years and life.

The amendment establishes just one kind of forgery, punishable with a maximum sentence of 14 years.

Another section of the amendment will prevent police from seizing telephones, teletypes or photographic equipment when they raid gambling houses. Present laws permit them to rip out telephones or other equipment belonging to companies, and confiscate them along with gambling equipment seized.

Fewer "Motelies"

The old practice of giving "motelies" to informers is to be discontinued in certain specific offences. By this system, a person who informs authorities regarding some classes of infractions of the code is entitled to receive half the amount of the fine imposed.

The moiety system still will exist in a number of offences, but it will be terminated in connection with crimes concerning copper coins, military offences, and cruelty to animals. In practice, the moiety system has not been used for some years, officials said.

Husband is Freed From Feline Pair

Derby, England — (CP) — Judge R. C. Willes in divorce court referred to a wife as "displaying all the characteristics of a wildcat."

"She ought never to have been allowed to marry any human being," the judge said.

He granted a divorce to William Sault, maintenance engineer, on grounds of desertion by his wife, Frances Sault.

Judge Willes said the wife had refused to live anywhere but with her mother. She found fault with his endeavors to find a home and eventually the feline wife and the cat-like mother turned him out of the latter's house."

Ballerina Dances Hubby Minds Baby

Vancouver — (CP) — Finding time to be a prima ballerina and mother combined takes a lot of manoeuvering and in the case of Pat Meyers, formerly of Vancouver and now of Hollywood, it keeps her husband at home a lot.

Home from the film capital where she starred in the musical "A La Carte," Miss Meyers said, "If it wasn't for an accomodating husband, I don't know what I'd do. He stays home almost every evening."

Miss Meyers made her debut as Alexandra Denisova in the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. "I'm awfully glad to get rid of that Russian name," she says.

Her husband, Grant Garrett, is a Hollywood writer. They have an 11-month-old daughter, Sharon Denise.

Made First Record Of 'Lili Marlene'

London — (CP) — Blue-eyed blonde Lale Andersen, who became identitie with the most famous song of the war —"Lili Marlene"—is to make a singing tour of Britain.

She will appear in Manchester, Leicester, Birmingham, Coventry, Cathan and other parts of the country.

Born in Bremen, Germany, Lale first sang "Lili Marlene" in a Hamburg cafe in 1938. At that time the song attracted no special attention.

Later she recorded the song and one day early in the war it was broadcast by a German disc jockey by mistake. Next morning thousands of inquiries about the song poured in from German troops.

It quickly became the theme song of the Nazi armies. Phony pinup pictures of the mythical "Lili Marlene" were sent out by the thousands to German troops. When the British drove the Germans back in North Africa they captured a German broadcasting station and there found a phonograph record of "Lili Marlene."

They promptly made it their own march song. German propaganda minister Goebbels sent for Lale Andersen and told her she must broadcast personally from Belgrade and ridicule the British. Lale refused and was sent to the island of Langeoog in the Frisians.

When the war ended, Lale was released by allied troops and went to Hamburg where she quickly became popular with British and American forces as an entertainer.

INDIANS GOING

In the Commons, Mr. Harris said many Indian bands and chiefs had suggested that the bill be incorporated that action be delayed for some time to permit consultation. He didn't know the procedure that would be followed.

John Diefenbaker (PC—Lake Centre) said Indians wanted full citizenship rights. At the same time they wanted full treaty right preserved. The treaty rights exempt them from the income tax, and give them hunting and fishing privileges.

John Blackmore (SC—Lethbridge), suggested a committee be appointed to deal with complaints from Indians, said the bill as they had drawn it was a "scandal". Treaty rights had been flagrantly and callously disregarded.

Angus MacInnis (CCF—Vancouver East) noted that the franchise has been extended to Indians in British Columbia and said he does not think it can be very long maintained that an Indian is a citizen when he is considered a British Columbian, but is a ward of the State when he comes under the federal authority.

Population Increasing

William Bryce (CCF—Selkirk), said a parliamentary committee had met for three years to study ways of improving treatment of Indians. He was disappointed that nothing had been done about the changes recommended by the committee.

At one time, said Mr. Bryce, the Indian population was dropping about 1,000 a year. But now as a result of improved hospitals and health treatment the population was increasing.

A country could not have a growing population continue as wards of the government. Such a population had to be given its place in the economy of the country.

Douglas Harkness (PC—Calgary West) suggested that welfare payments to indigent Indians be increased from $8.50 to at least $15 a month.

Mr. Harris said the matter was one which could be discussed later on the main estimates.

Another matter Finance Minister Abbott was pressed by Stanley Knowles (CCF—Winnipeg North Centre) and Howard Green (PC—Vancouver Quadra) to grant a cost-of-living bonus to superannuated civil servants. He said he would be glad to discuss it "at length" on his main estimates.

Tells of Cost

Works Minister Fournier, reporting on the cost of renovating an Ottawa residence purchased as a home for Canada's Prime Ministers, said it would take $135,000 to repair the main building and $30,000 to work on other buildings on the property.

Because of the age of the building, the government had been unable to get a final estimate of the cost.

JAIL SENTENCES FOR KIDNAPPERS

Accused of kidnapping Rumanian-born Oswald Eder for a Russian-sponsored kidnap ring, U.S. Corp, Paul Abel, left, and Sergt. John T. Frankey, right, are shown on trial in Salzburg. Their counsel, Maj. R. C. Pautledge, centre, is turning around to speak to Abel while Frankey looks over the charge. The prosecution alleged that the two G.I.'s, both military policemen, lured Eder from his British sector home by telling him he was wanted for questioning by a U.S. officer and that they then brought him to a previously arranged rendezvous in the Soviet zone of Austria and turned him over to the Red-sponsored kidnap ring. They were paid $250. Both were found guilty, Abel got 20 years in prison; Frankey, 15 years. — Central Press Canadian.

Donald Fleming (PC—Toronto Eglinton) felt it was "ridiculous" that the government should embark on the renovation program with no idea of the ultimate cost.

Sidney Adamson (PC—York West) said he had heard it would have been better to tear down the present structure and build a new home.

Both, however, endorsed provision of a prime ministerial residence.

BILL INTRODUCED

The provincial act gives a municipality power to hold Sunday sports by over-riding the Federal Lord's Day Act, which prohibits Sunday games where admission fee is charged.

Introducing the bill, Attorney-General Porter said a municipality may order a local-option vote on Sunday sports at its discretion. But if 10 percent of the voters by petitions demand such a vote, then it must be held. The same percentage is required for a petition to repeal the act's provisions. On this point Mr. Porter said that either "anti" or "pro" vote or need hold another plebiscite.

No Horse Racing

The bill does not allow horse-racing on Sunday. On the hours restriction, Mr. Porter said "the government is most anxious to preserve the essential features of the Sabbath Day and believes that anything approaching wide-open Sunday is most undesirable. The religious aspect of the day should be regarded by everybody as being of primary importance. It is also good that the day should be a day of rest as far as possible from work."

Mr. Porter said the bill was drawn in flexible terms while dealing with the application against the sports which is the chief industry in the town 30 miles west of Sudbury, at the same time preserves the rights of the people of the district to claim damages as result of pollution. Mr. Porter said he had not put into the bill any provision for arbitration of differences between the company and local residents. If there was any request for such a provision the government would consider an amendment.

The company had taken some steps to reduce a pollution and the Ontario Research Council is studying the situation to discover what else could be done. "It was the view of the government that no matter how necessary an industrial operation may be, there is a responsibility on the company to do its utmost to exercise every precaution known to science to minimize as far as possible the pollution of a river or damage to adjoining property," said Mr. Porter.

Budget Debate Opens

Budget debate opened with L. E. Wismer (CCF—Toronto Riverdale) claiming that the government had last year spent $18,000,000 of the taxpayers' money without the consent of the legislature. Expenditures had been $223,000,000 compared to the $207,000,000 authorized by the house. Wismer declared Premier Frost, who is also provincial treasurer, should have shown a surplus of $24,735,-000 instead of $1,000,000 — the amount applied to the sinking fund should have been shown as surplus.

And some of this surplus could have been used to provide cash relief for unemployment, instead of going into the sinking fund, he said.

J. G. Brown (L-Waterloo North) noted that Premier Frost had told the legislature he had reported a surplus in the last seven budgets. "Might I say that if during the past seven years the provincial treasurer had shown anything but a surplus he would not have been worthy of the name of provincial treasurer" said Mr. Brown. He warned that "the honeymoon is over."

May Face Deficit

Mr. Brown predicted Ontario will be faced in 1951 with its first deficit in eight years if it fails to collect five per cent of personal income tax now collected by the federal government and refrains from drawing on the Liquor Control Board's reserves.

Mr. Brown said documents such as annual reports printed by the government were useless because they were often almost a year old before being delivered to members of the legislature and the public. Expenditures for printing were grossly unwarranted and could be cut from $1,750,000 to $1,250,000.

Revenues collected and spent by the province was increasingly large because of the transfer of large responsibilities from municipal government to the province. This increase, he said, was substantially increased costs of administration.

Eliminate Expenditures

In these times of leveling of profits there is every step should be taken to eliminate as far as possible any unnecessary expenditures," he said.

The legislature did not have sufficient control of expenditures because about one-third of the amounts in the estimates were improperly described as statutory and not to be voted on by members.

Mr. Frost had said the government would seek to enter the income tax field, having the federal government not paying five per cent of the tax collected on Ontario. Mr. Brown said the federal government was not approving the idea and the province will have to collect its own tax.

In the night sitting an item of $11,000 in the provincial auditor's estimates, for cost-of-living bonuses for civil servants, received objection from R. E. Salsberg (Lab.-Prog. — Toronto St. Andrew).

He said wage increases should not be described as cost-of-living bonuses. Civil servants with minor exceptions were not adequately paid and he asked any civil servants "who might be gathered here or in the galleries" to join a legitimate trade union. "That applies to the press gallery as well," he added.

Claims Salaries Fair

Premier Frost replied that on the whole salaries of Ontario civil servants were the best or any province or even the federal government. Wartime cost-of-living bonuses had been incorporated in salaries; the present bonus of $15 a month was given 1½ years ago to meet rising living costs. In addition civil servants received "very generous" sick benefits, retirement allowances and pensions.

F. O. Robinson (CCF—Port Arthur), during estimates for motion picture censorship and theatre inspection said the government in co-operation with the motion picture industry should arrange to have special pictures suitable to children shown on Saturday afternoons.

Should be Considered

G. B. Ellis (CCF—Essex North) said charter of actresses appearing in films should also be considered.

"I have reference to the Bergman incident," he said. Theatres should not be allowed to "place a premium on the loose-moralled characters presented as the crown of Hollywood."

Premier Frost said the moving picture Stromboli to which Mr. Ellis referred had not yet been screened in Ontario.

"When it comes to a matter of censoring the morals of actresses, however, that is somewhat beyond our capacity."

If the picture were approved, advertising he had seen in United States publications regarding the picture had been "most offensive," the premier said.

Loss of Taxes On Mines Issue Before House

Toronto March 22 — (CP)— Harry Nixon (L—Brant) Tuesday night asked in the Ontario legislature if some legislation could be introduced to guarantee mining municipalities definite amounts to compensate them for loss of taxes on mines. The municipalities tax mines only on profits of taxes and not on property values.

Municipal Affairs Minister Dunbar said the municipalities are getting more money than they would receive if mine properties were assessed on their physical value.

C.C.F. leader E. B. Jolliffe objected to the payment of $254,000 "as may be directed by the minister of municipal affairs.

No individual should have the discretion to dispose of such a large amount of money (especially when it can have such important political consequences as the minister of mines (Welland Gemmell, PC—Sudbury) well knows."

Mines Minister Gemmell said there has been a notable decline in the number of claims and applicants among miners in Ontario in the last five years. The number of claims allowed as entitled to compensation in the event of disability was 58 last year compared with 54 in 1943. The figure was 43 in 1946, 46 in 1947 and 33 in 1948.

A. A. MacLeod (Lab.-Prog— Toronto Bellwoods) said pulp and paper operators who held land trust in the northern area could be required to restore the lands they hold by lease to the crown by mining companies who prospected and claimed property such, as deep rock formations beyond their rights in perpetuity.

Premier Frost said the investors in steep rock had "risked their all." Opposition members should be "of greater confidence in the country's future instead of "burling barbed arrows." Their attacks on the steep rock investors was "beneath their intelligence."

Mr. MacLeod said the government's policy could result in the annexation of the steep rock properties by the United States.

Mr. Gemmell said mining companies which merely held leases on their property rather than titles could offer no protection to shareholders.

Administration Drops Plans to Oppose Rights

Washington, March 22—(AP)— There is strong indication that President Truman's administration has dropped plans to oppose New York state's jurisdiction over St. Lawrence seaway power—if and when developed.

If this be true, New York has scored a significant triumph in the battle of the St. Lawrence.

It means, perhaps, the end of the United States government's efforts to federalize the power development. It lays to rest suspicions, expressed by many New Yorkers, that the government was planning a development like the government-run Tennessee Valley authority for the U.S. share of the St. Lawrence power.

Such a proposal is pending. It was advanced by a federal power commission examiner in recommending a construction authority for the New York power authority across the border, with Ontario, the power potential of the river.

The commission has not acted upon the examiner's recommendation, nor is it expected to do so in the immediate future. First, the commission must hear oral arguments on exceptions to the recommendation, now tentatively set for April 5.

The change of face within the Truman administration, if such be the case, was not won without concentrated effort. The behind-the-scenes struggle has been going on for months.

Robert E. Lehman, New York's 72-year-old Democratic Senator, has taken a leading part in insisting that his state be given jurisdiction over the St. Lawrence provided in the federal-state accord of 1933.

Under the accord, the power facilities of the St. Lawrence are to be constructed by the federal government and turned over to New York. The state, the accord specified, would reimburse the government for what it spends in constructing the power works.

These six Nova Scotia fishermen survived when their trawler plunged to the bottom of Halifax Harbor. Eleven other crewmen drowned after the Gertrude de Costo collided with the freighter Island Connector. The survivors, left to right, are: George Hartson, Queensland; Eaden Lohnes, Neil Sullivan, Robert Parker, William Crewe, all of Canso; and Edwin Tanner, Lunenburg. — (CP Photo.)

Future of Canadian Cheese Industry Depends on Domestic Consumption

BILLS FOR BLOOD

Selgnory Club, Que., March 22 (CP)— The future of Canada's cheese industry depends, to a great extent, on whether you, as a Canadian, will eat the equivalent of two cheese sandwiches a week.

T. B. Cooper of the Kraft Cheese Company, Montreal, suggests this today in an address before the National Dairy Council. Mr. Cooper is a newly-elected director of the dairy organization.

"With the dairy industry fearful of what will happen when the 1950 Anglo-Canadian cheese contract comes to an end in December, Mr. Cooper expresses the urgent need to expand and build up the Canadian market for cheese.

"If Canadians ate the equivalent of two cheese sandwiches per week," he says, "we would achieve a home-consumption figure of 91,000,000 pounds per year."

"We never would have to worry very much about market conditions outside our own border."

Probably the biggest single obstacle in the path of selling more cheese to Canadians is ignorance, Mr. Cooper says.

Despite the fact that cheese is the backbone of the dairy industry, "many do not know whether the product is made of milk or of cream."

Recently his company had the survey prepared by an advertising agency to determine whether many women knew what Canada's best-selling dairy product oversees, cheddar, was.

The name, which simply denotes plain old Canadian natural cheese, drew from 219 of the 450 women in the survey the comment that it meant sharp cheese; seven claimed it was processed cheese; 11 thought it had something to do with color; nine thought it was a trade mark and 22 thought it was a kind of cheese that was not processed.

Only 27 of the 455 women said it was simply natural cheese. The kind of cheese the British relish and are showing their delight by buying 85,000,000 pounds this year from Canada.

Another sales trouble, too, is that "many a practice ant" hotly quated and outdated."

"Many think that anything more forlorn than the greasy dried up, shapeless mass that is so often set up in a store to tempt a customer's appetite to buy cheese."

"Perhaps it is no wonder that it is so often associated with rat-trap bait."

Barber Admits Butcher Slaying Window Washer

Terre Haute, Ind., March 22— (AP) — A slender, greying barber who told police he was too little to carry the body of a big man, admitted Tuesday night the butcher slaying of a window washer.

Detective Cline Seward said 56 - year - old Clarence Taylor broke down after 12 hours of questioning and told a grisly tale of how he shot and killed George Willis Baldwin, 54, March 13, because of an argument over a pretty young woman.

The woman, identified as 19-year-old Mrs. Goldie Juanita Wilson, was held without charge for questioning.

The detective said Mrs. Wilson admitted being present when the shooting occurred. He said she apparently knew that Taylor three days after the shooting sawed the body in half and dumped it in Flossmore, Ill., a suburb of Chicago.

Baldwin, an eccentric who was known for his distrust of banks, often carried as much as $1,000 stuffed into snap-type purses in his pockets. He operated a one-man window washing agency in Terre Haute and stamped all of his currency with the name and address of his business.

Detective Seward said Taylor admitted taking about $1,000 from Baldwin's body immediately after the shooting.

Unemployment Problems Occupy N.S. Legislature

(By The Canadian Press)

Unemployment problems occupied the Nova Scotia Legislature Tuesday as the Seaside Province House opened its new sitting and joined other legislatures now in session across the Dominion.

The Speech from the Throne announced plans for public works projects which included new highways, bridges and schools. The Speech said unemployment is "of greatest concern" to the government.

Robert Stanfield, making his debut as Progressive Conservative leader, challenged the Liberal government's contention that most unemployment was caused by conditions beyond provincial government control.

Sunday commercial sport was concerned in one of three government bills of wide interest introduced in the Ontario Legislature.

The other bills concerned an injunction against the Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Company and the establishment of an Ontario racing commission.

The Quebec Union Nationale government came under the fire of Liberal leader George Marler, who said it keeps provincial taxation higher than any other Canadian province by over-spending. Opening debate on the budget speech he said Quebec taxation amounts to $44.20 per capita, twice the figure it was when the government came to power in 1944.

Three Speech Debate Ends

The Throne Speech debate ended in the New Brunswick House when Opposition Leader Hugh John Flemming moved provincial sales tax, if imposed, would be "the most cynical action ever carried out by any government."

There has been no government comment on widespread recent rumors that such a tax is planned.)

The slow-moving budget debate continued a fifth session where William Hughes (L-5th Kings) said future federal grants based on the per capita income of the provinces should be considered seriously at the forthcoming Dominion - Provincial financial conference.

At Regina the CCF government was put on 23-22 in defeating a Liberal amendment to the budget motion. The amendment, moved by Herman Danielson (L-Arm River) regretted that the provincial government still paid the $2.50 supplementary old-age pension only after a means test.

Washington, Pa., March 22—AP —Fast-spreading flames swept a barn at the Washington County Fair grounds Tuesday night, killing 14 harness race horses and causing loss estimated at more than $100,000. C. W. Hughes, superintendent of the Fairgrounds, said the horses were valued at $3,000 to $10,000 each and the barn at about $15,000.

Parents of Quads Still Beset by Money Problems

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont. March 22 (CP)— Parents of the Hargreaves quadruplets apparently are still beset by financial troubles incidental to the care of the four baby girls, now 5 1-2 months old.

John Moss, legal adviser to the family, Tuesday night denied that he had stated offers of help were pouring in. "Not one offer of adoption or support for the quads has been received by me," he told The Canadian Press.

"I am thankful for any other offer except that the mother received a vague offer from someone in Utica, N.Y., to adopt all of the babies.

"Any offer of any kind of assistance has come to me from any quarter other the parents talked with Monday of offering the quadruplets for adoption."

In a dispatch from the Sault Tuesday The Canadian Press had quoted Moss as saying that "many offered a hand" that the father likely would abandon any idea of selling the babies for adoption. McLeod was quoted as saying "things look pretty rosy now.")

Not Concerned

Mr. McLeod said he was not directly concerned with offers for adoption. His only concern, he said, is with general contracts and financial matters, not contributions for the quads.

The father of the babies, Ossie Hargreaves, a labor, has received reported Monday considering offering the babies for adoption. He said then that "the situation is becoming critical" as the civic relief payments run out and contributions and expenses continue.

Contributions to the civic fund for the quads apparently slumped to virtually nothing at the start of the year. Trustees of the fund said they would continue the campaign to raise sufficient money to meet the needs. Although Hargreaves said Monday that the new house was the least of his worries.

Local service clubs undertook to pay for the quads until the end of 1949 and the city itself paid for nursing services during January.

At Toronto Tuesday Welfare Minister Goodfellow said that half of the $1,000 grant given by the province to aid the quads is still unspent. The remaining $500 is in the hands of the Sault city treasurer, he said.

Nepean Reeve Asks Apology From Ottawa

Ottawa, Mar. 22 (CP). — The Ottawa City-Nepean Township "feud" was revived tonight as sentiments flared up anew Tuesday when Nepean Reeve Percy Nesbitt ran demanded an apology from Ottawa Mayor Charlie Hopkins before re-opening the Westboro town hall to 20 locked-out city employees.

Reeve Keenan took strong exception to Hopkins' action and suggested likening to the Russian blockade of Berlin, Nepean's action in locking out the city employees who staff tax offices in the hall.

The action was taken Friday with Nepean officials charging the city with failure to carry out settlement terms in Ottawa's partial annexation of Nepean's Westboro district.

Reeve Keenan said he became "fed up" with Hopkins' "attitude" following a meeting with Ottawa city officials, of the mayor's previous "blockade" of Nepean and said: "Nobody is going to call me a communist and get away with it."

He said if he had known previously what the mayor had said there would have been no meeting with Ottawa officials at which a joint committee was set up to solve the annexation problems.

BANDITS GET HAUL

Philadelphia, March 22—(AP) Five bandits broke up a quiet Philadelphia branch of the city tax office Tuesday and escaped with at least $17,119 in cash and some $31,000 in cheques. They may have gotten more, said receiver of taxes W. Frank Marshall. He said the total collections were in excess of $50,000—will not be known until an audit is made.

Cripps Will Bring Down Budget Next Month

London, March 22 — (CP) — One day next month — only an exclusive few know the exact date — the House of Commons will listen solemnly to a two-hour exercise in economics, delivered at a rate of approximately £30,000,000 ($93,000,000) a minute.

The speaker will be Sir Stafford Cripps, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and his text will be Britain's 1950-51 budget address.

From a red dispatch box, said to be the same one that William Ewart Gladstone used as long ago as 1860, Sir Stafford will produce a bundle of typewritten notes — the outline of a speech more important than ever before in regulating the country's economic picture.

Income tax now absorbs about 40 per cent of the national income. State spending is on a level unprecedented in peacetime.

Therefore there is more than usual interest in how" the state spends its money.

In a recent broadcast, a 'BBC commentator estimated that the tax collector's takings in one recent week equalled the whole of David Lloyd George's budget of 1909 and was twice Gladstone's budget of 1860.

There is general agreement that this will be another austerity budget, the third Sir Stafford has introduced since he replaced Hugh Dalton at the Treasury.

Budget forecasts are usually futile — for obvious reasons the government must keep the stock exchange guessing — but early predictions are that Sir Stafford will make really determined efforts to reduce government spending.

Economics are predicted in the National Health Service, now costing about three times as much as originally estimated.

Increased taxation is considered unlikely, in his last budget address, Sir Stafford said: "There is not much more immediate possibility of redistributing the national income by way of taxation."

Govt. Requested to Repeal Chinese Immigration Law In Brief Presented to Minister

BRITISH AIR CHIEF

Air Chief Marshal Sir John Slessor, 52, K.C.B., C.B., D.S.O., N.C., succeeded Lord Tedder this year as Chief of the United Kingdom Air Staff. He served as Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief Mediterranean Air Command, Deputy Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Allied Air Forces in the Second World War. In 1947 he was appointed Commandant of the Imperial Defence College. — (CP Photo.)

Ottawa, March 22 (CP)— The Federal government today was asked to repeal the present Chinese immigration law and give Chinese the same immigration rights enjoyed by Europeans.

The request was made in a brief presented to Citizenship Minister Harris by a delegation representing the committee for the repeal of the Chinese Immigration law. The committee is made up of groups of non-Chinese and Chinese residents throughout Canada.

Emphasizing that no request was being made for implementation of a policy of extensive oriental immigration, the brief made three specific requests:

1. That the Chinese immigration law be repealed and everyone in Canada brought under one immigration law "free from the present form of racial discrimination."

2. That the new law provide that the wife and children, regardless of age, of people who are legal residents of Canada be admissible. Under the present law Chinese residents cannot bring children over the age of 16 into Canada and a Chinese must become a naturalized citizen before he can bring his wife and children here.

3. That the law be extended "so that, in proper cases, a reasonable number of Chinese who do not fall within the class of wives and children, may be admitted to permanent residence in Canada."

Must Be Fair

"Our request (for repeal of the law) must be a fair and reasonable one, otherwise the standing committee of the Senate on immigration and labor would not have unanimously recommended its repeal in March, 1947," the delegation said in the brief.

"Moreover, it must be fair and reasonable, otherwise many leading Canadian newspapers would not have come out in editorials in favor of its repeal. . .

"Otherwise we would not have the United States, Britain, Australian representative Canadian organizations as the Anglican Church of Canada, the Roman Catholic Church of Canada, the Anglican, Baptist and Presbyterian Missionaries in Canada, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Council of Churches, the Council of Women, the Association for Civil Liberties, the Canadian Co-ordinating Committee of Youth Groups to mention only some. . .

Cocktail Lounge Patrons to Pay More For Drinks

Toronto, March 22 (CP)—Cocktail lounges and night clubs which provide elaborate variety entertainment soon will have to charge 15 per cent more for their drinks.

Amendments to the Hospital Services Commission Act introduced in the legislature by Premier Frost, provide for taxing cabarets and night clubs in a way similar to theatres and other amusements, starting April 1.

A tax will be imposed for the first time on dances where no liquor is served.

On lounges and dining lounges — popularly known as cocktail bars and nightclubs—the old tax was at five per cent on a maximum of 40 cents on a $2 cover charge. The new bill provides for a tax of 15 per cent on admission prices up to $6 and a flat $1 for those over $6.

The amusement taxes in Ontario are devoted to payments for hospital grants.

BASIS OF COMPROMISE

Washington, March 22—(AP)— In a move to break the log-jam, suggested to American Oil companies that they agree to accept about 70 per cent payment in sterling when they sell their oil in the British area. Informed officials said this plan was presented Friday as the basis of a "compromise" proposal to settle a long-standing argument with Britain. Most of the major oil companies, it is understood, feel Britain should be asked to pay about 60 per cent in dollars and only 40 per cent in sterling.

Canadian Financiers Behind Plan to Buy McLaughlin Estate Near Oshawa For Movie Studio

By JOHN PATTERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, March 22 (CP)—Canada's first big steps in the field of motion-picture production may turn out to be giant seven-league strides.

A group of Canadian financiers is behind a plan to purchase the 475-acre estate of R. S. McLaughlin at Oshawa, 30 miles east of Toronto, and turn it into a movie factory. The plan, now in blueprint stage, calls for the erection of film processing buildings and studios for production of motion pictures for theatres, industry, government documentaries and television.

R. G. McMullen, spokesman for the financial interests, told The Canadian Press in an interview that Michael Powell and Eric Pressburger, internationally — known British film producers, are "definitely interested" in the project.

"Although the deal for the property has not yet been completed" Mr. McMullen said, "we can say that we have been approached already by producers in England as possible, and the United States by advertising agencies and others interested in using our facilities for the making of movies.

Will Be For Rent

"We intend to establish studios and film-processing facilities for rental to anyone interested in making movies in Canada.

"The plan calls for an entirely new approach to film production which will make unnecessary the huge, expensive overhead often found in Hollywood and England.

A start is planned for next summer. First, full-scale production will be by the British team noted in its work in "Red Shoes" and other films. It may not be possible for a start on entertainment movies in 1950 but by next year it is hoped to have everything in readiness.

Until Canadian technicians can be trained to the high calibre required for important motion-picture-production, it will be necessary to "import" experts, Mr. McMullen said. Eventually, the plant will be as fully Canadian as possible.

Bones and Skeletons

Monsieur Guy's Stock in Trade Smiles Hideous Welcome to Clients

By NORMAN CRIBBENS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 22 (CP)— Medical students all over the world know Monsieur Raymond Guy—the man who deals in bones and skeletons.

In his bright-lit west end office, skulls grin at customers from green, baize-topped tables; skeletons hanging inside glass-fronted cupboards, smile a hideous welcome.

Those who wish can buy a complete skeleton for £30 ($83). Or they can acquire ownership of a skull with a full set of teeth for £10.

"Business? It is so-so," said Monsieur Guy, absent-mindedly patting the shining skull of a deceased African native. "I buy bones for this work mainly from Africa and Austria, where supplies are plentiful.

"We sell a lot of bones and skeletons to Commonwealth countries and the United States. The demand from the Commonwealth is particularly pleasing, as it shows more and more people there are taking up the medical profession."

Fitting the bones together keeps Monsieur Guy and staff of five—all men—busy 5 1-2 days a week. For there are 206 bones in every complete skeleton.

"Occasionally we have a rare find when all the bones are from the same body. Very rare. We can tell that this is so by the easy way they fit together. Naturally, such a skeleton is more expensive —and it is so interesting."

M. Guy, who queues daily for a ride to work on a London bus, looks like an absent-minded professor and sometimes behaves like one.

"I never take samples home," he said, "because I am afraid I might leave them on a bus and give someone a fright. We, of course, are so used to them."

A human hand can be bought as cheaply as 15 shillings, but a foot costs twice as much because feet are in greater demand.

"At present more and more British shoe shops are buying feet for display purposes. Good for trade but rather difficult as it leaves us with so many hands in stock.

M. Guy is described on his calling card as a human osteologist. In the top left-hand corner is a portrait of a grinning skull.

IT'S A FLYING TEA-TABLE

Contrary to all appearances, this involved looking mechanism is not a flying saucer so many people have reported seeing. It is a model of a proposed craft that combines a helicopter's vertical lift with a conventional plane's speed, and its California inventors are certain that it will be the ship of the future. The top photo shows the propeller arrangement, and the lower photo how the craft would look from the ground. More like a flying tea-table, than just an individual saucer. — Central Press Canadian.

British Lord Finds Mice are More Fun

Wrottesley, Staffordshire, England — (CP) — Stern-faced ancestors, painted in sombre oils look down severely on Lord Wrottesley as he plays with his mice.

But his lordship doesn't give a hoot for ancestral frowns. He is too absorbed in his hobby — raising spotted, tame mice. His face lights up with merriment as he watches them.

"You see, I'm trying to get the perfect spotted mouse," he said. "By mating them regularly I should get a creature with completely round black spots and white underneath."

Each evening Lord Wrottesley studies his pets, washes them and dishes them their dinner of oatmeal. Then he enjoys a "romp" with them.

Before mice, his main interest was snakes and lizards. But one night the male black swan flew away from his ornamental lake at Wrottesley Park, deserting his bride.

"I got a new mate for her from the London Zoo," he said, "but my queen is temperamental. She didn't like the newcomer and kept him at pecking distance.

"So I thought a mouse for a change."

Lord Wrottesley is a 77-year-old batchelor. His family dates back to the 13th century.

ONTARIO

ONTARIO MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT TOLL RECORDED ALL-TIME HIGH IN 1949

URGENT APPEAL IS MADE FOR WHOLE-HEARTED PUBLIC AND PERSONAL CO-OPERATION TO CUT TRAFFIC LOSSES IN 1950

In deaths and injuries on Ontario streets and highways, 1949 proved to be the worst year in the history of the Province. Despite the fact that the intensive and maintained campaign for safety by the Department received generous support and co-operation of the press, the radio, the schools, the police, many service clubs, safety organizations, the operators and drivers of commercial vehicles and many thousands of citizens, the toll of tragedy reached an all-time high.

HERE IS THE 1949 RECORD

Motor vehicles registered in Ontario	949,368
Tourist vehicles recorded	4,800,000
Persons killed	830
Persons injured	17,469
Property damage	$9,831,689

THE PICTURE IN 1950

In 1950 there will be in operation on Ontario highways one million motor vehicles owned by Ontario residents. There will be more tourist vehicles in the Province than ever before. Traffic will be much heavier, and more chances of accidents will exist.

Estimated motor vehicles in 1950,	1,030,000
Estimated drivers licenses in 1950,	1,330,000
Estimated tourist vehicles in 1950,	5,000,000

Unless the Ontario public takes this problem of highway safety seriously to heart and everyone sets out to cut down this mounting scale of accidents, it is possible that in 1950 the death toll may reach a new shocking figure, with the number of persons injured keeping pace.

With these facts in view, it behooves every man and woman, young and old, to make it a personal objective to establish and maintain safety, and to preach it at all times to schools, families, drivers and acquaintances.

The Department of Highways is devoting all its energies to a continuous planned attack on accidents. The earnest teamwork of all citizens and organizations is requested.

It is a common cause that all of us can aid for the general good.

GEO. H. DOUCETT
Minister of Highways

Immigrants Learn Almost too Fast

Winnipeg, — (CP) — Teaching English to immigrants is anything but a routine business.

"Sometimes you can hardly keep up with them," says Florence Gaynor of Ottawa.

Miss Gaynor was in Winnipeg recently to pass on the latest methods of instruction to teachers who are leading 1,100 immigrants through the mazes of the English language.

She is a member of the Canadian Citizenship Council and is a consultant on immigrant education to the federal government. Her services are made available to any department of education or any volunteer organization providing instruction for immigrants.

One of the Citizenship Council's most important achievements to date has been a considerable amount of uniformity in teaching methods across the dominion, Miss Gaynor says.

"An immigrant can start his classes in Halifax, then be moved to Winnipeg and carry them on there with practically no disruption," she said.

One set of textbooks is used almost exclusively across Canada, developed from a series that originated in Massachusetts.

"Because most of the immigrants are adults, not children, and have had a wide variety of experience, we find that discussion method of teaching most effective," she said.

One of the teacher's main difficulties is remembering to restrict her own teaching vocabulary to words and sentences the class has learned previously.

A two-year scheme for immigrant education has been worked out by the council and accepted by most Canadian provinces. It calls for one year of language study and one year of citizenship training.

The consultant's own experience with teaching English was with Mennonite colonies in southwestern Saskatchewan. She is now on leave to the Citizenship Council from the adult education department of Saskatchewan.

In a test to prove or disprove "Miracle's" survival. The "imitation cat" was put into the oven one afternoon and taken out the following morning, still raw with only parts of the sealskin singed. The "Miracle" cat suffered singed fur, one inch of her tail was gone and the pads on her feet were badly burned. "Miracle's" supporters say they've proven that the cat really spent those 36 hours in the oven. — Central Press Canadian.

NativesMakeLaws In British Africa

Lagos, Nigeria — (CP) — Twenty-eight years ago Timothy Odutula was a clerk on the payroll of a Nigerian government office in his home town of Ijebu-Ode.

Today, at the age of 47, he is a wealthy African business man, head of a group of cloth stores and shopping centres in Southern Rhodesia and owner of valuable timber concessions and gold mining stock.

He is also an eloquent speaker in the legislative council of Nigeria's western region.

Odutula is one of many Africans who have been elected to office in British-administered territories under Britain's plan to develop self-government in her African colonies.

African legislators were first appointed to the legislative councils by British governors. Then a system was developed which allowed natives to elect their own councillors. Today Africans form a majority in legislative councils of many African districts.

The growth of these councils has been a gradual one. There was a danger in direct elections by the entire population that it would have put politically-illiterate rural people in the hands of an educated minority. To avoid this, a system of indirect election was adopted. In Nigeria consisting of a chain of local councils which elect Africans to sit on district and provincial councils. These provincial or regional councils elect the members of the central legislature.

British colonial administrators see in the new political system the way to the creation of modern states. The legislative councils still don't have final jurisdiction in governing colonial territories but they are regarded by Britain as Africa's parliaments of the future.

Why pay for what you'll never need? . . .

WHY pay for extra seating space you never seat? A Hillman has ample room to meet all your family's normal driving needs —with comfort. It's easier to park, too—and takes far less garage space than bigger, bulkier cars.

Let's consider safety! Any engineer will tell you that good balance, not dead weight, keeps a car on the road. That's why a Hillman handles and steers so beautifully. And in an emergency, it's not mere size that counts— it's heavy-gauge steel and one-piece frame and body construction. The Hillman has both!

Let's consider economy! Why use 100% more gas to haul an extra ton of useless weight? The Hillman's new, bigger, "PLUS POWER" engine packs plenty of power for smooth get-aways, easy hill-climbing and speedy highway cruising. You get all this with a gas consumption of up to 35 miles per gallon!

The Hillman is here to stay! A permanent, constantly increasing network of Parts and Service outlets is serving thousands upon thousands of happy, enthusiastic owners from coast to coast.

...aritime or Not, ...'s Moot Point ...or Newfoundland

Ottawa — (CP) — Union of ...ewfoundland with Canada now ...firmly established but one ...estion of some importance is ...ill unanswered.

When, if ever, is a Maritimer ...a "Maritimer?"

Since Confederation in 1867 of...ial and semi-official language ...s referred to the three Mari...me Provinces — Nova Scotia, ...w Brunswick and Prince Ed...ard Island.

Will this now be amended to ...e four Maritime provinces" ...ith Newfoundland added?

None of the local constitutional ...thorities want to say right off ...ey are thinking about it.

Meanwhile, the question has ...me importance because Liberal ...mbers of the Commons and ...nate from Newfoundland have ...en invited to sit in on periodic ...aritime province caucuses here...fore restricted to those from the ...ginal three. They likely will ...cept.

Premier Smallwood of New...undland says there is no ques...on about it.

"Newfoundland is the fourth ...aritime province," he said re...ently. "But I prefer a different ...rm—"the five Atlantic Prov...ces which comprise the east...n half of Canada."

Thus he includes his neighbor, ...ebec.

Only two provinces— Alberta ...d Saskatchewan—are without ...lwater coastlines.Some author...ies claim the other eight have ...e right to be called Maritime ...ovinces.

Some Newfoundlanders are not ...en on being included within ...e Maritime appellation. Gordon Higgins (PC—St. John's ...st), who opposed union said: ...me day, maybe, we'll form a ...Maritime) bloc, but not yet."

"It's bad enough to be Cana...ans," he added with a twinkle ...n his eye that meant he was not ...ery serious.

T. G. W. Ashbourne (L—Grand ...alls-White Bay) said Newfoundland's natural relationship ...ith the original Maritimes will ...ssert itself and the matter of of...icial designation will be dealt ...ith eventually if necessary.

G. W. Carter (L— Burin-Bur...eo) said there was certainly no ...estion that "we are definitely ...maritime province" but as for ...eing "Maritimers" in the tradi...ional sense, time and usage ...ould decide.

There is one man in parlia...ent who can speak for both ...des — Nova Scotia's veteran ...enator William (Admiral) Duff ...ho was born in Newfoundland.

"Sure, Newfoundland is a mar...itime province," he said, "but ...hether they are Newfoundlan...ders or Maritimers what's the dif...erence? They're damned good ...eople anyway."

Ten Lawsuits For $36,000 Filed in Montreal

Montreal, March 22. (CP) — Ten lawsuits for a total of $36,000 damages were filed Tuesday by A. L. Stein, Montreal counsel for the Jehovah's Witnesses, on behalf of Olive Lundell of Toronto and Winnifred Parsons of Sarnia.

Miss Lundell and Miss Parsons each claim $5,000 from the Laurentian City of Joliette, Que., for what they termed "seditious libel", allegedly contained in a resolution passed by city council, printed and circulated.

The two women evangelists of the religious sect charged that the resolution approved their removal from Joliette last Dec. 14 when they were approached by a group of young men, told to enter a taxi and then were driven to Montreal.

(At that time, Montreal police said the Joliette men had sought to have the two women arrested for "vamping" the population of Joliette with their door-to-door visits.)

Fourteen members of the Joliette Charter of the Knights of Columbus, Roman Catholic men's organization, are named as co-defendants in the two actions against the city, because they allegedly instigated the council's resolution.

Two Joliette newspapers — L'Etoile Du Nord and L'Action Populaire—are named as defendants in separate actions for $5,000 each for the printing and circulation of articles concerning the two witnesses of Jehovah.

The other suits, for a total of $10,000 were laid against Joliette citizens for their part in "abducting and kidnapping" the two women.

Miss Parsons and Miss Lundell moved to Joliette last summer from New Brunswick after they were evicted by citizens of Edmundston, N.B. They had lived in Joliette with an English-speaking woman resident of the predominantly Roman Catholic community.

Millikan Doubts Man Can Make Hydrogen Bomb

Pasedena, Calif., March 22 — (AP) — Dr. Robert A. Millikan nobel prize-winning scientist, says he is not at all certain that man can make a hydrogen bomb.

He is frankly skeptical that any man-made device will ever split the earth asunder.

But it is true he says, "that we and our possible adversary now possess the instruments to destroy each other."

Millikan is 82 today. In an interview, the man who first interview, he observed:

"With all the talk about the hydrogen bomb, I'm not yet convinced that it's at all certain we can build such a bomb. Of course, if it were possible to make the hydrogen in all the seas combine at nce into helium, we probably could explode the whole earth and transform it into a nebula.

"However, I'm still skeptical. I think it would take a warmer lady than Mother Earth to make such a horror possible."

Montreal's Charm Attracts Writers

Montreal — (CP) — Places and things of historic interest as well as the city's beauty spots make Montreal interesting for Canadian writers.

"There is a wealth of natural setting and numerous places and things of historic interest," said Mrs. Barnard. "To those who have the ability to seek and find, a great deal of pleasure is obtainable at no cost at all. There will also be the thrill of discovering some delightful surprises."

Good Entertainment

Policemen and Firemen Hockey Game Nets $722.50 for March of Dimes

Whether it was the novel spectacle of policemen and firemen stepping out of official character into puck-chasing roles, the additional grand entertainment or the worthy cause for which it was presented, may never be known, but suffice it to say that upward of 3,000 people, old and young jam-packed Memorial Arena last night at the Police-Firemen March of Dimes "Ice Ball".

And the climax of the evening came when Fire Chief Gerald Vance, Ontario Provincial Police Inspector A. McDougall, and Mayor Jack Allin presented Horace Brown, March of Dimes official, with a cheque for $722.50. The presentation ceremonies took place in centre ice during the show and were loudly applauded by the audience.

Good Entertainment

It was a good show from start to finish. Talented artists of the Quinte Skating Club tossed in their ability to the good cause as did the Kinsmen Club Band whose sprightly melodies added greatly to the general enjoyment. Clowns, grotesquely-garbed in all the glory of their traditional costumes, provided hilarious comedy throughout while the puck-chasing buckaroos of the service departments served up a hockey dish that was a climax to an evening of fine entertainment.

In direct entertainment contrast to the hockey attraction was the figure-skating artistry of members of the Quinte Skating Club. Miss Shirley Fox and Mary Jane McNally, W. Wilkes and Pauline Hall, Doris Kerr, L. Bulford and Beverley Cowan, talented young members of the club gave outstanding performances on the silver ice. In singles and pairs the colorfully-costumed skaters whirled and pirouetted through an intricate maze of ice-skating figures that drew the unstinted applause of the audience.

Antics Please Crowd

Jack Dickens, perennial Pierrot of the Skating Club aided and boomeranged abetted by Archie Hill and Don Foster of the Fire Department, Jerry Brennan and H. Foote, formed the clown contingent and their hilarious antics had the crowd in stitches all evening.

The "piece-de-resistance" of the show was the much anticipated hockey "battle" between members of the Ontario Provincial Police, aided by a member of the RCMP, and the city Fire Department.

The firemen were garbed in scarlet and white uniforms, with the limbs of the law apparelled in what appeared to be raiment of the Royal Canadian Air Force. It was a stirring battle all through with both teams going all out, that is, as far as they could go in a stage a thrilling exhibition that ended as it should in a draw with each team scoring six goals. The teams gave their services free, with the firemen purchasing their uniforms out of their own pocket and the police wearing "borrowed plumage".

Both Out to Win

While the calibre of hockey served up was not exactly that of the National Hockey League, it must be said that "worse" games have been played on Memorial Arena ice. There was no fooling nor pulling of figurative punches. Both police and firemen went out there to win and the result was a hard-fought game that ended with no casualties, no penalties, a satisfied clientele and aching muscles and creaking joints on the part of the cast.

The pellet-chasing policemen took every the scoring in the first period with goals from Brain and Hurrie, but the fire-eaters, incensed at the initial setback, roared into the picture with a pair of tallies from Donnan and Dainard to tie the score at the end of the period. Dainard, with two and Culhane scored for the firemen in the second with Hurrie and Brain registering for the police. The period ended Firemen 5, Police 4.

The "cops" grabbed the lead early in the third period with goals from Brain and Cockburn but with a minute to go Dainard scored his fourth goal of the night to put the firemen on even terms and the game ended six-all.

Prominent Players

While perhaps it is not fair to pick individual stars, Dainard, Donnan and Culhane stood out for the Fire Department while Brain, who scored three goals, Hurrie with a pair, Boerster and Gable played fine hockey for the police. Bill Holway and Perry Everett were the officials.

The teams:

Police—goal, Fraley; defence, Cockburn, Williamson; centre, Boerster; wings, Harrie, Gable (not Clark); subs, Brain, Lloyd, McLeod, Christie, Johnson, McBride.

Fire Department—goal, Vance; defence, Donnan, Dainard; centre, Rump; wings, B. Smith, Browning; subs., Emerson, Culhane, Reid, F. Smith.

Nixon's handicap is that the Sox have much good young pitchers as Maurie McDermott, Chuck Stobbs and Frank Quinn ahead of him . . . But in Georgia they'll tell you he was too good to play high school ball. Other high schools refused to play Lindale (his home town) if Willard was to pitch he struck out too many . . . In Alabama they remember him as the Auburn University pitcher who set a Southeastern Conference strikeout record as a sophomore before turning pro. He hit close to .400 there too . . . And last season at Birmingham, Nixon won 14, lost 7, fanned 104 and, as a sideline, hit .39, including four hits in win one of his own games . . . but at least nobody refused to play.

Meyer Expects Baseball Race To be Closed

San Bernardino, Calif., March 22 (AP)— The coming National League baseball race, says Billy Meyer of Pittsburgh Pirates, figures to be so tight that the emergence of a single brilliant rookie for any one of several contending clubs could determine the outcome.

And, adds the silver-thatched pilot of the Pirates with a trace of annoyance, it is about time that the post-war world produced a few youngsters of genuine big league calibre.

"I don't know where they are, but they're bound to come along pretty soon," said Bill. "The best of the old timers are going over the hill. Where are the good young ones who are going to take their place?

"Maybe this will be the year. Maybe I'll find that I have a couple of great boys, and if I do we could be right up there in the race. The league is that closely balanced. If I only find them."

He left the sentence dangling with an expressive shrug.

Bill said he "suspects" that everybody will pick Brooklyn to do it again, but makes it plain that he doesn't consider the Dodgers one of the great ball clubs of all time. He feels, rather, that they sneaked in last year while Boston Braves were fighting among themselves and St. Louis Cardinals were nursing their aches and injuries.

"Look where the Phils finished," he remarked. "Third. And just because they had some good youngsters who were in there hustling all didn't seem any thing about the reputations of the pitchers they were facing. Actually, they're not a solid ball club. Eddie Sawyer did a great job with them."

The apple of Bill's eye at the moment is Dale Coogan, a strapping 19-year-old who jocks and eats a good deal like Bill Terry did around first base.

Canada Plays Final Game With Sweden

By MICHAEL O'MARA

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 21 (CP) —Edmonton Mercurys — barring a 1,000-to-1 upset today — have won back the world amateur hockey title by Canada, but they plan no let up in the final game with Sweden.

As far as the westerners are concerned, the contest will be something of a grudge match. They want revenge for the only defeat they suffered on the continent in their pre-tournament swing, a 5-3 reverse in Stockholm early this month.

"We played in slush two inches deep that night," Edmonton coach Jimmy Graham recalled. "They must have shut off the freezing unit to get it that soft. Two nights later, in the same weather and the same rink, the ice was hard as concrete.

"We're going all out to whip the Swedes. We want to beat the hell out of them—and you can quote that."

The game is scheduled for 9:45 p.m. Gmt (4:45 p.m. EST) and it is expected the world cup will be handed to the Mercurys immediately after the contest.

Only a crushing defeat by the Swedes, enough to reverse the whole goal average trend, would give second-place United States a chance for victory. Canada—if the Americans piled up a fat win over Norway.

But nobody can figure the Mercurys losing to Sweden after topping all other scorers in the tournament. The latest success was the 12-0 trimming Canada handed Britain Tuesday night. The loss cost the losers their last mathematical chance for the world title, but they are expected to nail down European honors.

The game that will decide the winner crown today is the Britain-Switzerland meeting. The final pool's other game pits the U.S. against Norway.

Caps and Reds Jump Into Lead In Playoffs

(By The Canadian Press)

Indianapolis Capitals and Providence Reds are best-of-three in the lead Tuesday night as the American Hockey League playoffs get away with a pair of series '3' games.

The Caps swamped St. Louis Flyers 7-1 while Providence downed Springfield Indians 6-4. Both series are best-of-three.

Series 'A', a best-of-seven affair, starts tonight between Cleveland Barons, champs of the league's western division, and Buffalo Bisons, top team in the eastern section over the season.

Winners of the 'B' series will meet in another best-of-three for the right to meet either Cleveland or Buffalo for the playoff title. The season closed last Sunday night.

Fred Glover, Doug McKay and Don Morrison did the scoring honors for the Caps in the first period. Adam Brown scored the only St. Louis goal. Rod Morrison Glover, Barney Weit and Joe Lund got the other Indianapolis goals.

Ray Laplante, Jack Stoddard and Jack Hamilton scored four goals in the final period of the Springfield game for the Reds with Hamilton accounting for two. Billy Arcand and Hank Bernard got the other two Providence goals.

Doug McMurdy scored twice for Indians with Vern Kaiser and Bill Gooden counting the other tribe goals.

The Buffalo-Cleveland game will be played in Cleveland and it's the only game scheduled for tonight.

Second Place Battle Between Maple Leafs and Canadiens Highlights Card in N.H.L.

By HARRY ECCLES
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Two of the four teams in the Stanley Cup playoff can relax until the cup semi-finals open March 28. They're Detroit Red Wings, who have clinched the National Hockey League title, and New York Rangers, who got the fourth and last playoff spot by an eyelash.

But the two others are tied for second place, and Toronto Maple Leafs and Montreal Canadiens promises to pack Toronto's Maple Leaf Gardens to the roof when they collide tonight. Players on the team finishing second each get $500 from the league, while players on the third-place team get $300.

The money angle isn't near as prominent as the fact that the team finishing third will have to meet Detroit in the semi-finals. Neither Toronto nor Montreal is anxious to tackle Detroit in the top openers.

Maple Leafs brought up five players from Pittsburgh Hornets of the American Hockey League for the closing drive of the season.

Canadiens reach Toronto today with coach Dick Irvin reportedly worrying over various injuries. But Canadiens have an edge over the Leafs this season, with five victories against four losses, plus three ties.

In other games tonight New York Rangers are at Detroit, and Chicago Black Hawks are at Boston.

At New York Tuesday night the Hawks scored in every period to beat Rangers 6-3. Their goals were evenly divided between Bep Guidolin, Bert Olmstead, Gaye Stewart, Doug Bentley, Gus Bodnar and Roy Conacher. Goalgetters for the Rangers were Ed Slowinski, Vinny Lesieck and Dunc Fisher.

Rangers suffered a severe setback to any hopes they may have in the cup playoffs when centre Edgar Laprade received a knee injury. Laprade had only recently returned to action after missing nine games, and Tuesday night suffered torn ligaments in his left knee.

Big Seven

Doug Bentley of Chicago Tuesday night picked up a goal to break a sixth-place tie with teammate Metro Prystal and take sole possession of sixth spot in the National Hockey League individual scoring race. Bentley has 19 goals and 33 assists for 52 points while Prystal has 29 goals and 22 assists.

Branch Rickey Comes up With Another 'Steal'

Vero Beach, Fla., March 22 — (AP) Branch Rickey, president of Brooklyn Dodgers, seems to have plucked another ripe plum from a fruitless orchard.

The Dodgers' deacon, in a deal with the Philadelphia Athletics last winter, acquired pitcher Dick McCahan, a young gent with some promise but a supposedly dead right arm.

Rickey gave up third baseman Kermit Wahl from the Montreal farm. In addition, Rickey pried $25,000 from Connie Mack to complete the deal.

McCahan had a respectable 10-5 record with the A's in 1947. He even hurled a no-hit, no-run against Washington. But his arm went sour in 1948 and he was sent to Buffalo of the International League last season. It was there Rickey picked him up.

Assigned to Brooklyn's Montreal team, McCahan pitched for the Dodgers Tuesday, against Fort Worth. And off his performance, Rickey has come up with another "steal."

McCahan hurled the first three innings, allowing one infield hit and one run. He fanned three and walked three. But, more important, after the workout the husky hurler remarked: "I haven't thrown like that in almost three years."

LAST NIGHT'S STARS

Chicago's Doug Bentley whose unassisted goal early in the second period assured the Black Hawks of a 6-3 victory over New York Rangers.

Fish-Market Poesy Adorns Paper Bags

London — (CP) — Robert and Thomas Hancock are twin heredidary poets laureate of Billingsgate, London's fish-market district.

They compose Cockney verses that are printed on the sturdy brown paper bags in which thousands of fish and chip shops dispense their gyrlebarian delicacy.

Robert and Thomas are grandsons of the original poet laureate of Billingsgate, Robert Hancock I. For over fifty years the elder Robert turned out a new poem every week. He died seven years ago leaving $465,000. He had started in business with a hand-cart. Today an electric press prints 2,000 "poetry bags" a minute.

Three Cities Bidding High For B.E. Games

(By The Canadian Press)

Canada is scanning out the British Empire games in 1954, but which city will be chosen to play host still remains a mystery.

Ken Yost of Winnipeg, National secretary of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada, Tuesday said bidding for the games honor has reached a feverish pitch. Last time the games were held in Canada was in 1930 at Hamilton.

Montreal, Vancouver and Toronto are going all-out in an effort to obtain their cities as the site. Some reports say Vancouver is prepared to put up at least $250,000 a year, starting this year, to get the classic.

Montreal was slated to be the site of the 1942 games, but lost out when they were cancelled due to the war. For that reason, many Montrealers feel their city should be given first priority for the 1954 competitions.

Mervyn (Red) Dutton of Calgary is the new Stanley Cup trustee, succeeding the late P. D. Ross of Ottawa, it was announced Tuesday by J. Cooper Smeaton, executive of the trophy representing world hockey supremacy, at Montreal.

Dutton has long been prominent in hockey circles as player, manager and later as president of the National Hockey League. He filled the presidency for several years after the death of Frank Calder and refused a further appointment because of his business interests in the west. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Clarence Campbell.

Jean Beliveau starry centre with Quebec Citadels of the Quebec Junior Amateur Hockey Association, said Tuesday night at Quebec he will listen to any professional contract offers coming his way.

"If they think I'm good enough to make the jump into National Hockey League play I'll probably make it," he said.

Beliveau was commenting on a report from Montreal quoting general-manager Frank Selke as saying the second highest scoring J.A.H.A. player would be tendered a pro contract by Montreal Canadiens of the N.H.L.

The 1950 National Figure Skating Championships start at Washington today, and both Dick Button and Yvonne Sherman are back to defend their titles. Of the two, Button should have the easier time. He has just returned from London, where he won the International Championship for the third straight time.

Miss Sherman, a cute 19, may be in for more trouble. The New York Miss finished third in international competition, as compared with fifth for Sonya Klopfer, a 19-year-old New Yorker.

President Ralph Misener of the Winnipeg Blue Bombers Tuesday night announced that the club has signed its first United States football import of the season. Buddy Tinsley, 25-year-old former all Southwest Conference tackle and a regular tackle with the Los Angeles Rams for two years, signed a contract with the Western Interprovincial Football Union Club Tuesday.

At Toronto, the National Soccer League, Western section, has petitioned the Dominion Football Association to change champion declaration dates from July 14 to Aug. 14 and change the Dominion Cup competition from August to the end of September.

The league felt that the present method of operating the Dominion Cup competition places too much hardship on the competing teams and makes entering it a financially unsound proposition. They said moving the cup date would build spectator interest.

ROCKETS IN PLAYDOWNS

Ottawa, March 22 — (CP) — Inkerman Rockets, perennial junior A champions of the Ottawa District Hockey Association gave a repeat performance Tuesday night as they staved off a determined Ottawa St. Patrick's College sextet for a 5-4 victory and their fourth straight district title.

The victory gave Inkerman the best-of-seven final series 4-2 in games. They now meet South Porcupine Combines, Northern Ontario titleholders, in a best-of-five series opening here Friday.

Winnipeg, March 22 — (CP) — Old-time style of hockey vs the new — the argument still continues.

The way hockey is played today, says Tyner (Winnipeg Tribune) Allan, it's 99-per-cent hustle and one-per-cent skill.

"You don't get us wrong. We appreciate as much as anyone else the player who gives his best every minute he is on the ice. And we don't like the player who is inclined to dog it.

However, Allan says, "in making a fetish of (if you'll pardon the expression) intestinal fortitude, hockey coaches are placing too low a premium on skill.

"Coaching methods tend to reduce all players to the same level of mediocrity. Like mass-produced automobiles, they are all the same and you can't tell them apart — with or without a program. As a result, the game has suffered artistically."

AT THE BELLE

CECIL B. DeMILLE'S "SAMSON AND DELILAH"

A picture she made under protest seven years ago was the reason why a surprised Hedy Lamarr was awarded Hollywood's most coveted role since Vivien Leigh was chosen to play Scarlett O'Hara.

When Producer Cecil B. DeMille was casting his latest Paramount Technicolor spectacle "Samson and Delilah" which is playing today and Thursday at the Belle Theatre, he conferred with Miss Lamarr about the possibility of her portraying the wicked Delilah. Hedy, wanting to put her best foot forward, suggested that C.B. screen "The Strange Woman" if he wanted to see what she could really do with a role.

With due solemnity, therefore, the private projection room at Paramount was prepared for the crucial screening. The movie ended, watched the 1946 picture unfold before his eyes— was omitted, silent. Almost a week had passed and Hedy had not heard from Delilah. She believed she had lost the role. After all, had DeMille not sold publicly that he wanted his Delilah to be a composite of Sara Bernhardt and Cleopatra.

Hedy's pessimism was almost justified. DeMille had not at all taken to Hedy in the projection and was on the point of nixing Miss Lamarr when a member of his staff produced a print of "White Cargo," Leon Gordon's famous story of West Africa which was made into a movie in 1942.

In that film Hedy had reluctantly played the role of Tondelayo, the tempestuous native girl who played havoc with the mental serenity of British subjects on a sweltering plantation.

Once more the DeMille projection room was prepared for a screening rite, and this time C.B.'s animated face reflected his enthusiasm. Hedy was cast as the beguiling Tondeleyo —and he knew he had a Delilah.

Miss Lamarr, happy to have been chosen for the most spectacular role of her career, received the title role in "Samson and Delilah with Victor Mature, George Sanders, Angela Lansbury and Henry Wilcoxon also star in the film which boasts a cast of thousands.

Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, March 22—(AP)—Oscar, who is Hollywood's biggest target, better start ducking again.

The academy awards affair which will be held tomorrow night, is Hollywood's most criticized as well as its most publicized event. Everybody has his own idea of how the Oscarizing should be handled. So the Ad Hollywood Forum put this question to a number of film performers:

"How do you think the academy awards can be improved?"

Ida Lupino—"I think it's time the public was let in on the voting. After all, the audiences are the final judges of motion pictures. And the industry pick the technical awards, but leave the major selections to the movie goers."

Ronald Reagan—"How can we improve the academy awards? Improve pictures."

Lizabeth Scott—"Hollywood is full of sentimental and loyal people who are apt to vote for sentimental reasons rather than for real merit. The awards might be more accurate if film critics all over the world were included in the voting. However, that would make the academy awards too international. I see nothing wrong in voting for sentimental reasons. I do it myself."

Loretta Young—"Many great performances are overlooked because they are given in obscure pictures. We should get a chance to vote on all pictures and performances, whether it's a western from the public or an epic from some other studio."

Robert Stevens — "Academy awards will never be completely fair because the voting is sentimental and prejudiced. There's no way of eliminating the human element. An actor gets a vote because he needs a break or loses a part because movie goers don't like him. Voting is often on the basis of personality, which is contrary to the purpose of the academy."

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Bridge Week, grandpa, is not a period set aside by the relining of dentures. It is four afternoons and evenings of bridge tournaments under American Contract bridge regulations.

Cities in which an annual bridge week may be held are assigned by the ACBL. At such conventions are played title matches that are of higher standing than state championships.

In some cases only sectional titles are determined. In some are decided champions of a region. As attendance to these increase, the matches are advanced to increase national events.

In the west, five cities now hold an annual bridge week. They are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver, Coronado, Portland (Ore.). Only in the first two of these are the nationals included so far.

Helping to avoid attendance at these affairs are players from all over the country. Some of the best and some of the worst come to vie in contests of different grades.

In the nationals are eligible only those players with high master ratings issued by the ACBL. In the regionals play masters of lower ratings. In other events are players of lowest rating.

These meetings are no longer small pumpkins. In three of the days in California last year was recorded an average 1000 entries a day. That many in action at one time makes a lot of bridge.

During the last session at Coronado several tables had trouble in this deal:

	NORTH
	♠ K 7 6
	♥ 10 8 6
	♦ A 7 5 4 3
	♣ A J 3 2
WEST		EAST
♠ 9 6 5 4		♠ Q J 10
♥ 2		♥ 9 7 5
♦ A 2		♦ K 10 9 8 5
♣ J		♣ K 10
♠ 9 8 6 5
	SOUTH
	♠ A 9
	♥ K Q J 4 3
	♦ Q 6 2
	♣ Q 7 4

Most of the south players reached a correct contract of four hearts. It was easy to make without any unusual effort.

Most declarers, however, could not bring themselves to doing that which needs no thinking. So, many of them went down. It just goes to show you that a deal can be too easy.

Brighteners

Oslo, Norway—Microphones, cameras, powerful undersea lamps, sound recording and echo apparatus are being used to operate them, left here yesterday in the Norwegian research ship G.O. Sars to find out whether codfish talk to each other when they woo.

American scientists have found out that herrings have the "hyaline babe" and the "come down and see me some time" know-how, Norwegian ichthyologists recall, and add that there is no reason to suppose that their cod is in anyway a bashful fellow.

Anchoring in the cod spawning grounds, the scientists will lower their equipment down to the cod's bedside—100 feet down. If she says anything to him, or he says anything to her, the world can expect to hear about it next week.

Macon, Ga. — Judge Roy B. Rhodenhiser, Jr., dismissed drunk charges against 22-year-old Joe Spires yesterday when he pleaded "just married."

Miami Beach, Fla. — Termites in her shoe soles were worth $10 to Miss Rita Logo yesterday.

Miss Rita Logo sued her landlady, Mrs. John H. Sullivan, for $13.95, saying the soles of her wooden platform shoes, worn only once, were honeycombed with termites when she took them out of a box in the closet.

Municipal Judge Kenneth Oka decided the termites had caused $3.95 less damage than Miss Logo claimed, and awarded her $10.

NEW SUBDIVISION OPENS

Sudbury, March 22 — (CP) — A new veterans' subdivision on Highway 17, some eight miles west of here, will be opened in the near future, Mel Marshall, Veterans Land Act administrator for the district, said today. Roughly 40 veterans are expected to start construction of their own homes in the Sudbury district this year. Marshall said 20 new homes were built here last year under V. L. A. benefits.

SOLUTION TO PARKING PROBLEM!

The rear end of Paris, France, car in front proved to be just right for use as a parking meter when the little car got a vigorous nudge from the big truck at left. Instead of being squashed, the little car rolled up the back of the front car and came to rest as you see it. None of the cars involved sustained serious damage. Parisians had a free show until the gendarmes finally got the autos untangled. — Central Press Canadian.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was reading his paper and talking to himself about the bum stock market, and I said, Hey pop, talking about what happens to money, Lucky Leroy Shooter passed a dime out of a sudden in his pants pockit yesterday.

I thawt Leroy was the boy who invaribly finds money, pop said, and I said, So he generlly invaribly does, and that's what makes it so unusual.

Oh well, they say every dog has his day, so may be every unlucky dog has his nite, pop said, and I said, Lucky Leroy didn't mind about the dime itself, because he can allways find more money if he really puts his mind on it. The only thing that worried him was, he allways finds dimes that drop out of holes in other people's pockits instead of losing them out of holes of his own, and he was afraid his good luck was starting to turn bad, so in that case he couldn't depend on himself to find more money to make up for it, I said.

I'm not sure I follow that involved statement, but I'll try again some time when my mind is clearer, preferably on some occasion when I'm not out of breth trying to keep up with the downward course of the market, pop said, and I said, Anyways, pop, Lucky Leroy didn't really have anything to worry about. His mother gave him another dime to cure her gilty conscience for not having fixed the hole in his pockit, and then Leroy found his own dime in his shoe when he took it off to go to bed, and his mother let him keep the other dime too because she's naturelly good natured, I said.

MRS. KILBON

"I do not consider that I committed murder."

A defence medical witness said Tuesday either of the two wounds would have been fatal. Dr. Doyle, a University of Toronto specialist in psychiatry and neurology, was asked by the crown whether the bullet which entered Mr. Kilbon's temple, fracturing the skull on both sides, would cause death.

Possible to Survive

"I could say it could," he replied. "But even with such a serious head injury, it is possible for a patient to survive."

Ordinarily, a person suffering such a head injury would die, said Dr. Doyle. But there were cases in which a patient lived despite a bullet in the brain. It depended on the damage to particular parts of the brain.

Dr. Doyle's earlier testimony was similar to that of a pathologist who testified Tuesday for the crown.

Dr. Doyle said the wound Mrs. Kilborn inflicted on herself severely damaged the aorta, a main blood vessel which supplies blood to the lower limbs. The main vein returned to the heart also was pierced by the bullet which entered her stomach, he said.

"The effect of the damage to these blood vessels would be instantaneous collapse and I would expect the patient to die very quickly. There would be no hope of recovery . . . I would expect a patient to die within ten minutes.

Would be Fatal

"The shot through the aorta would be fatal without any doubt."

Dr. Doyle said he examined Mrs. Kilborn last Oct. 2, less than a month before her death, and found she was suffering from Huntingdon's corea, a nervous disease which degenerated important nerve cells in the brain.

"It is a hereditary disease and leads to depression and tendency to suicide," he said. "She admitted to me that she wanted to die and said she had made an attempt at suicide. I recommended to her husband that she be committed to a mental institution."

The crown's case against Kilbon was completed Tuesday in one day.

Dr. Harold Gold, 29, testified that his autopsy on the 54-year-old woman disclosed that the bullet which pierced her brain caused her death though she already was dying from a stomach wound.

Left to Get Water

He was called in after Mrs. Kilbon was found dead Nov. 1 in her favorite rocking chair in the kitchen of her rambling farm home in nearby South Monaghan township. The farm is some 20 miles south of Peterborough.

The partly-paid Kilbon told the court that he left the kitchen of his home to get some water. "When I came back she was lying on the floor and the gun was on the table. She asked me to lift her and put her on a chair. I couldn't bear to see her suffer and shot her in the temple.

"She suffered from an incurable disease that affected her mentally. She was packing that day to go to Whitby (mental hospital) and I had no idea she was going to take her own life."

Believe Wound Hastened Death

Dr. Gold said he believed the head wound hastened death in reply to a question by Mr. Justice Wells, he said death from the head wound would have occurred in five minutes to 30 minutes and from the stomach wound five minutes to one hour.

"I think the head wound caused death in this case," said the pathologist.

Dr. A. L. Russell, who attended the woman, said he was called to the Kilbon home shortly after 9 a. m. Nov. 1. "Mr. Kilbon said to me: 'There is a mess inside.' He said she had shot herself and he had finished her because he couldn't stand to see her suffer and had shot her through the left temple."

CITY CHANGES NAME

Trail, B.C., March 22—(CP)—This mining city in the Rockies let it be known Tuesday that it no longer is the "Smoky City." From now on, the nickname will be "Silver City". The "Silver City" title — derived from silver output of a mining company (Consolidated Mining and Smelting) here—was proposed by the board of trade and approved by city council.

There's nothing small about this cheque, which is to be presented to the National Cancer Institute of Canada at forthcoming meeting in Ottawa of the Canadian Cancer Society, by the Alberta division. The $50,000 cognprises the largest single donation ever made towards cancer research in Canada. Some of the delegates are shown here after they approved the donation. The cheque is of ample dimensions — 10 feet by three feet. — Central Press Canadian.

BIGGEST CHEQUE EVER HONORED IN U.S.

Yep, that's what the cheque says: 36,446,000. It's the biggest cheque ever to be honored in the U.S. and it represents bonus payments to war veterans in Pennsylvania. Over a million veterans will share in the disbursement. — Central Press Canadian.

50 Nearly Trapped In Cistercian Community Fire

North Cumberland, R.I., Mar. 22 (AP)—A fierce $2,000,000 fire Tuesday night wrecked four buildings of the 50-year-old Cistercian community of Our Lady of the Valley.

The flames destroyed the main chapel, the infirmary, the guest house and the monastery where Trappist Monks live in bade cells.

Fifty of the 160 residents and guests of the Cloistered Order were nearly trapped.

Four Trappists were carried to safety from the infirmary. A dozen leaped 20 feet from second floor cells in the flaming dormitory. Another dozen escaped from the third floor.

The Community Leader said if the flames had gained five minutes more headway between 40 and 50 persons would have lost their lives.

DOG'S BARK ROUSES SLEEPING HOUSEHOLD

Toronto, March 22 — (CP) — Awakened by the barking of their pet dog, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Jarvis and their two children escaped from their blazing suburban Scarboro cottage early today.

Firemen said "They no sooner got out than the whole cottage seemed to burst into flames." Damage was estimated at $3,000.

ENDORSES PLAN

Toronto, March 22 — (CP) — After 12 years of actively opposing amalgamation of Toronto and 12 surrounding municipalities, former mayor Fred Gardiner of Forest Hill has endorsed the proposed plan. He told a meeting of the Progress Club Tuesday that amalgamation was the only answer to greater Toronto's growing pains.

"Lordy," she looked down at here Wes. "What is it, a polar expedition?"

"Minimum requirements out here, it's several miles."

He watched her try her horse, first a trot, an easy second pace, a rapid gallop. He joined her then on his own bay.

"You ride well," said he. "Pretty indeed."

"Why, Wesley!" She was still in light mood. "You are improving. You gave me a compliment and didn't even blush. And — wherever are your cooly glasses?"

He did blush then. He had hoped she would notice, and when she did it embarrassed him. But he smiled.

"I, uh, took your advice."

"Stout fellow!"

"Ronnie, I did try this week to get in touch with you, but you were always away. You fly a lot."

"I was in Mexico, Andre wanted to go and—"

"Andre?"

"Yes. Wesley, please don't—don't harbor any feelings about that night. Andre is very impulsive, but he was awfully sorry he struck you, and no harm really came from it after all. I bawled him out plenty."

"I see."

"You won't—I mean, it's all right, Wes?"

"Of course, Ronnie."

"You're a dear."

A dear! She had said it. Wesleys soul responded as if it were a musical cord struck and drummed by a sympathetic hand. Then sir suddenly the music within him died.

Obviously, she had said it with no thought. A casual remark. "Dear" meant nothing really. Plainly too, she was deeply concerned about the man Andre who was infinitely nearer to her in wealth and social position and general eligibility. Doubtless she ans Andre—

"Andre has taken a liking to Mexico, so I fly down there often," she broke his thoughts. "We go to Hermosillo, Guaymas, anywhere. Lots of fun. He has some sort of—of business acquaintances there. Something about oil I think."

"Mind if I change the subject, Ronnie? There is Rainbow Canyon in the haze. We'll be there in an hour but even now you can see the gorgeous coloring."

It was so. The landscape, ever changing, took on more splash of red and yellow and green. Thin desert air stirred their horses to speed. They were at the foot of the great red rock precipice which held the cliff dwelling in exactly 45 minutes.

"We climb the steep slope up hand over hand, then take six ladders," Wesley said. "Follow me, if you aren't afraid."

"I used to play follow the leader little boy!"

They laughed together. It was good thus to climb and play, like children indeed. Wesley wondered if he dared break into song. He felt like it but didn't quite have the nerve.

The climb, itself a Grade-A adventure for most folk, lifted them 670 feet above the canyon floor. The dwelling was a three story rock ruin in a great wind-eroded niche. It offered an incomparable view.

"O-o-o-o-oh!" Ronica gave heart-felt tribute, gazing off.

Wesley handed her his binoculars.

She murmured in awe. "Vastness! Even our horses are like ants, standing in the canyon trees It's marvelous Wes!"

He nodded, understanding. "We have—become things in common," cut to see. "Some mutual likes." puted Wes with her for an hour near the brink edge, looking off and talking. He told her much about the ancient people who had lived in this cliff citadel. The sun shadows lengthened and crawled the canyon, so lest they lose too much light they explored the ruin itself, moving quietly, almost reverently from room to room.

They came to a peculiar little third-floor ceremonial chamber and Ronica peeped out a tiny window there.

"Company's coming," she said. "I see somebody else on a horse."

"Yes? Who? Here, take—here's glasses again."

She focused his binoculars, peered onward and down.

"Why Wes—it's that girl, Lona Montoya! And she's coming into Rainbow Canyon!"

That innocuous looking liquid called Dilalno's Compound which Andre Girardeau carried in his baggage was left before him on the table now. The label on the bottle proclaimed it good for sundry sprains and aches and pains, but Andre had no pains. Instead, he dipped a pen in it and wrote with the colorless fluid as follows:

"Apparently actual practice with new bomb sight delayed because of intrusion Japan into the scheme also. S. Border patrol captured five Japanese unmistakably on bombing grounds first proposed, hence practice delayed tential avenues for transporting. Was carried out—survey grounds by the Bailey girl in her own plane which was given free privilege across border for helping patrol.

"Think best not rush attempt to acquire instrument until perfected in tests even though Bailey himself declares it virtually perfect. Please remit more money must live expensively."

He allowed that sheet of paper to dry thoroughly, then with primary ink from a fountain pen he wrote a completely different message right on top of the other. This new message had to do with a vacation in the southwest, with books, with clothes and similarly uninteresting family talk. Signed with a fictitious name, wiped free of possible fingerprints, folded and inserted with gloves in a fresh envelope, the message then was directed to a woman in Washington, D.C. Late that night the stamped envelope was mailed without Andre's fingers ever touching it direct.

Less than 48 hours later, by coincidence, Andre Girardeau was on the front porch of the Rocking R ranch house chinning amiably with Thomas U. Bailey, when two dots in the eastern sky grew into definite shapes and presently circled down over the ranch itself. Andre noted—with quiet satisfaction — that mechanics near the Bailey hangars ran out to spread a white cloth signal. Three new hangars had been built on this private field since Andre came west, he knew. Three besides the one which house Ronnie's golden monoplane.

Mr. Bailey saw the ships and stood up to gaze at them.

"Well, well!" said he. "They're here at last! Army boys, Andre, sent out from the factory for—uh—a bit of testing."

Andre tried to sound casual. "New type of motor, Mr. Bailey?"

"No, the new bomb sight. Probably read about it, eh, Andre?"

"Some mention of it, yes."

"The army's using our planes. Want to run some tests on the desert here. No importance particularly, but—uh, keep it confidential, Andre."

"Oh certainly, Mr. Bailey. I should like to see the tests. I mean, assuming any part of them is open to public inspection."

"Fine! Don't blame you. Want to get it myself, so I'll take you along!"

Andre congratulated himself inwardly. He was making better progress than he had dared hope. Not that he could yet expect any actual study of the bomb sight, but at least his intimacy with Thomas U. Bailey was perfect groundwork perfect cover against any remote possibility of suspicion directed against him.

He already knew that Bailey and the army department heads worked hand in hand, that not more than ten men actually had the new bomb sight. Even the high-ranking pilots who had given it preliminary tests — with such startling success — were unacquainted with the detailed construction of the thing.

It was a "gadget," Mr. Bailey had said in a newspaper interview which wrankled an aviator to drop bombs from hitherto impossible heights and strike small targets with almost infallible accuracy. Which, of course was why Andre and the powerful European organization backing him were determined to get the secret at any cost. Specifically, Andre's assigned task was to get a sample of the sight itself!

O.P.P. IN DETROIT TO PROBE CHARGES OF WINDSOR VICE

Commission Will be Ordered if Necessary

Toronto, March 23. (CP)—Attorney-General Porter said Ontario Provincial Police are in Detroit today probing charges that vice is rampant in the neighboring Canadian City of Windsor.

If the investigators uncover enough evidence to warrant appointment of a royal commission "one will certainly be named," Mr. Porter said in an interview.

"No decision has yet been reached whether we will intervene in the police commission inquiry taking place at Windsor, but you can be assured that if the provincial police present evidence of a nature which will warrant our intervention, by royal commission or otherwise, my department will certainly intervene."

The Detroit conference, he said brings together Douglas Bell of Chatham, Ont., special crown counsel in the inquiry which was adjourned last week, and Harry Toy, former Detroit police commissioner.

Says He Knows Details

Toy has said he knows details of alleged vice and rackets in Windsor and offered to testify before the police commission if invited. His offer was made last week-end when the inquiry was adjourned to enable Bell to seek permission to examine Detroit police files.

The Windsor inquiry was launched after Corporate A. J. Hanrahan, convicting bootlegger Joseph Asael, referred to the fact that Asael had been "unhampered" by Windsor police.

Mr. Porter said there have been "a lot of wild statements" about the Windsor situation.

"But so far there has been no concrete evidence to support the charges that vice is rampant in Windsor. It's all very well for people to come forward and make wild statements but for my department to act we must also have something on which to base a case."

He said he is "not completely satisfied with the way the inquiry at Windsor is going".

"I feel it is my duty to see that its conclusions put at rest any doubt in the minds of the people of Ontario that gambling prostitution and vice generally are not 'wide open', as reports have stated."

Jumpy Hotel Clerk Keeps Police on Jump

Sudbury, March 23 (CP) — A jumpy night clerk at a city hotel had Sudbury police on the run during the night. They were called to the hotel five times between 12:55 and 5:10 a.m.

He first called police to say that suspicious - looking characters were sleeping in one of the rooms and he wanted them put out. Police found the characters sleeping peacefully and refused to disturb them.

Several more calls followed with the clerk complaining of hearing strange noises in the building. At 5:10 a. m., he called to complain that someone was out to "get me." At the same time he said, "Oh, my, there's another noise" and fainted.

Police said he had to be taken to hospital where he was unconscious for a half hour.

Uses Name of Policeman Slain In Gun Battle

Timmins, Ont., Mar. 23 (CP)—A nattily-dressed, 28-year-old ex-convict who used the name of a policeman slain in a gun battle at Sudbury last year, is wanted on charges of forgery, false pretences and impersonation.

Detectives said they are hunting for Jean Dubois, alleged to have used the name of Constable Gerald Dault, who three years were killed by gunfire when a Sudbury factory worker went berserk last summer. The slain officer was a second cousin of the policeman and a bystander.

Police said Dubois registered at a Timmins hotel Feb. 24, flashing a Sudbury detective. He gave his name as Gerald Dault, investigators said. The hotel keeper cashed cheques for $24, $40 and $15.

The next night, police said, the man used the "police badge" to gain admission to a Timmins dance hall.

Dubois sneaked out a side door of the hotel, carrying his luggage, police said. They described Dubois as five feet, seven inches tall. He has reddish wavy hair and is well dressed.

Detectives said he recently completed a term for theft and forgery and is known to go under five aliases.

C.N.R. AND T.C.A. DEFICITS SPARK HOUSE DEBATE

Will be Examined By House Committee

Ottawa, March 23 (CP) —It was railroad day in the Commons yesterday.

Railroads and allied transportation problems, came before the chamber as it passed $65,986,459 in further supplementary estimates to clean up government expenditures in the 1949-50 fiscal year ending March 31. The chamber then voted $230,801,820 of interim supply to carry government expenses for the next two months.

One of the major debates of the short Wednesday afternoon sitting swirled around the deficits of the government-owned Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines before Trade Minister Howe said they could be examined next week by the House committee on railways and canals.

The CNR showed a deficit for 1949 of $42,043,028; TCA's deficit was $4,317,594 on domestic and Atlantic services.

George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, pounced on the TCA deficit, citing figures to show how hot it had grown in recent years, and demanded a full explanation.

Mr. Howe, the minister who reports to Parliament for TCA, gave a number of reasons—crash-es around the world which had discouraged air travel; empty seats on TCA's winter flights across the Atlantic and investment in bigger planes to double the number of seats available.

Report Soon Ready

At the House opening, Prime Minister St. Laurent said he understood Senator Maxwell Royal Commission on arts, letters and sciences will conclude hearings shortly and that a report will be ready for printing early in the fall.

Small police units tried to pierce the roadblocks. They were attacked with hand grenades. An armored column was then rushed to San Severo, near the big wartime airbase of Foggia.

The situation in Foggia, a city of 64,000 about 200 miles southeast of Rome was tense. Demonstrators were gathered in front of the Chamber of Labor headquarters. Police, reinforced by units of an artillery regiment, were on guard against any outbreak of violence.

In most of Italy, workers went back to their jobs. An exception was Parma, where the one death occurred yesterday. There the Chamber of Labor ordered the strike continued for another day in protest against police firing on demonstrators. Eight police and seven other demonstrators were injured.

Governor-General William McKell today issued a proclamation under the act.

Menzies said those convicted of offences under the proclamation would be liable to imprisonment, and if they were not born in Australia would be liable for deportation.

LIBERALS OPPOSE PRINCIPLE OF CIVIL MARRIAGE

Toronto, March 23. (CP)—Liberals in the Ontario legislature and two CCF members Wednesday voted against the principle of civil marriages shortly after the House gave second reading to a new Marriage Act.

The 16-man Liberal group, along with C. H. Millard (CCF—York West) and T. H. Lacey (CCF—Waterloo South), supported an amendment by Harry Nixon (Lib.—Grant) expressing disapproval of civil marriages and asking that the bill be not given second reading. The amendment was defeated by a vote of 63 to 16.

The House then unanimously approved the bill which also provides for registration of clergy of non-denominational groups such as the Salvation Army, sets out regulations for marriage by publication of banns, and assists persons who can not prove their wife or husband is dead but wish to remarry.

Also given second reading was a bill to amend conditions and covenants in deeds. The legislature hereafter will sit three days a week instead of four.

Action on the bill was then adjourned until 8 p.m. to speed up proceedings, by refraining from going through the motions of voting down opposition bills.

R. A. McEwing (Lib—Wellington North) said there was "no good, sound reason" why marriages should be civil.

"Not many ministers who are the ministries are asking for this bill," he said. The judges and magistrates were not anxious to take on extra duties either.

BOLTER HELPS DEWEY

Albany, N.Y., March 23 —(AP) — Governor Thomas E. Dewey regained a state rent control bill through New York's legislature Wednesday night, with the help of Democratic bolter. The break in a day-long stalemate came shortly before final adjournment when Senator Peter J. Dalessandro, a protege of Albany County's Democratic leader, Daniel P. O'Connell, voted for the Republican administration bill.

Flying Saucers Said Seen By People of Berlin, Lisbon; Fiery Trail Left by One

London, March 22 — (Reuters) — Don't look up now, but there are flying saucers in the news again.

Citizens of Berlin and Lisbon reported seeing the silvery platters. And early next month the people of southern Sweden are going to be deluged with the things — at least so says a report from Eudeeck, Germany.

Meanwhile the Paris newspaper, Le Matin, has come up with an explanation of the saucers. Says the paper:

"One country is doubtless trying out an absolutely new type of apparatus. It remains to be seen which, and what its intentions are."

To catch up with this "one country", Francois Martial is working in Algeria on designs for a saucer to catch the other flying saucers. Martial, a civil servant, said today he would soon put on exhibition a model of his saucer. He said the prototype is 210 feet, has 10 motors, has five engines, floats and can accommodate 33 passengers.

Appear Luminous

The Portuguese saucers, reported today, were said to be luminous and came in three Lisbon Exironcamentos, about 70 miles north.

The Berlin version remained stationary over the city for a long period Thursday, said the newspaper Telegraf. Then the round silvery objects — seen over the American sector of the city—shot off northwards, leaving a trail of flame."

The Luebeck report said the inhabitants of Neustadt and northern Sweden was to be the result of the world's first V-weapon manoeuvre. The Soviet Union and Russia over the Baltic Sea next month.

The aim of the manoeuvres is to co-ordinate Russia's new almost-completed system of permanent

Broken Old Woman Freed from Life Sentence to go Home to Die of Cancer

Detroit, March 23 — (AP) — A broken old woman serving a life prison term for a crime of passion was free today to go home and die of cancer.

The children of Mrs. Minnie Lambert, 61, came here to take her home.

Governor G. Mennen Williams commuted her sentence Wednesday after he was advised by doctors she had only six to 10 days to live. For the last 18 years she has been a prisoner in the Detroit House of Corrections.

Her children pleaded with the governor for her release "so she won't have to die in prison."

The woman was convicted in 1932 of first-degree murder for plotting the shotgun slaying of her husband, Darius so she could marry his brother, Albert.

It was a country love affair. The brothers had adjoining farms. Mrs. Lambert and her brother-in-law admitted plotting her husband's death. They feared he had found out about their affair.

Mrs. Lambert gave her brother-in-law a shotgun and shells. She sent her husband on an errand to her brother-in-law's farm. Albert hid in ambush behind a tree, and Darius was slain.

Albert Lambert, also convicted, died six years ago in prison. Minnie Lambert has 10 grown children. Six of them have been to see her bedside here.

In her younger days she weighed 220 pounds for her five feet six inches. Now she has withered to 80 pounds, but her black eyes remain alert in a face that has death written on it.

A son, Irvin, 25, acting as spokesman for the family, said the children would provide hospital care.

"As long as it's for our mother" he said, "no matter what it costs, it's all right, if it will make her happy for the few days she has left."

Gigantic War of Ideas by U.S. Against Russia is Proposed, Put Forward by 13 Senators

Washington, March 23 (AP)— The State Department looked with favor today on a proposal which would launch the United States on a gigantic war of ideas aimed against the propaganda of Communist Russia.

The plan was put forward Wednesday by Senator William Benton (Dem., Conn.) and 12 other Senators as a means to win the minds and loyalties of men to the cause of freedom.

The Benton plan would marshal every means of information in a co-ordinated world-wide drive to give the lie to Russian attacks on the United States and other non-Communist countries.

Ed Barrett, assistant secretary of State for Public Affairs, said: "This broad approach is in complete accord with my own feelings and the State Department's estimate of the importance of the work to be done in this field."

Benton said he felt the program would be a "powerful answer to State Secretary Dean Acheson's call for 'total diplomacy'" in the cold war against Russia.

It was given to the Senate in the form of a resolution which, if approved, could be the basis for the greatest psychological campaign ever turned against communism.

Benton outlined a plan which would include:

Blizzard Strikes Brockville Area

Brockville, March 23. (CP)— This eastern Ontario community threw its snow fighting machinery into high gear today to do the teeth of one of the worst blizzards to hit this area within recent years.

Snow began falling late Wednesday and has all but clogged city streets. Up to mid-afternoon today only a handful of cars, though all snow equipment was at work, they were fighting a losing battle.

The highways department warned all motorists that highways are dangerous. Transport service is running behind time.

U.S.A.F. PLANE CRASHES IN ONTARIO

Rome, N.Y., March 23. (AP)— A United State Air Force C-47 transport plane crashed and burst into flames in a driving snowstorm here today. One man was killed and another was injured slightly. Three others escaped injury.

The crash occurred while the plane was taking off from an air force base, about four miles north of Rome in Central New York.

Former German War Prisoner Chalks Up Good Marks as Parole Nears End

Montreal, March 23 — (CP) — Willy Gottschalk, the 29-year-old former prisoner of war who 11 months ago was given a year to live, marries and can return to Germany, chalked one up for himself today.

He was awarded a certificate of proficiency with first — class honors in chemistry from Montreal Technical Institute. Now the good-looking blonde seaman is so confident authorities will let him stay in Canada that he intends to marry Joan and settle down on a southern Ontario farm.

Gottschalk was recaptured last March, 2½ years after he escaped from a farm at Tillsonburg, Ont., where he was working as a war prisoner. He was first captured in November, 1939, when a British warship seized his ship, the Hannover, which was on her way to Atlantic and was in prison camp in England, Scotland and finally Canada.

In late 1946 when other war prisoners were being repatriated Gottschalk disappeared. R.C.M.P. picked up his trail a year ago after he had been working as a dish-washer and later as a chemical-plant worker in Montreal.

He told authorities then: hope I'll be able to return to Canada some day as an immigrant. Then maybe there won't be any objection."

Representations were made on his behalf. Government officials recalled he had been only a youth and a civilian when captured. So they gave him a year to make a place for himself in Canada.

Now he works hard as a chemical process man and studies at night while he sweats out the first month of his parole.

All he said about his life to reporters when he was awarded the certificate last night was: "I have no complaints."

Bakelite Industry Growth in Canada Outlined to Club

Outlining the growth of the Bakelite industry in Canada from its small beginnings some twenty years ago to its present steadily progressing place among the top industries of Canada, Mr. John E. Budhus, factory manager of the Bakelite Company of Canada Limited addressed a recent attendance of the St. Andrew's Men's Club on Tuesday evening. Speaking with informal ease Mr. Buchan explained many of the small technical operations of the Belleville industry in a manner that was most interesting and understandable to the least scientifically minded of those present. The speaker closed his discourse with an expression of pleasure in having selected Belleville as the site for the new plant of the industry and felt that those members of the industry's staff, who had moved to Belleville with the new plant would make ideal citizens of the city.

Mr. Buchan was introduced to the club by James A. MacKenzie past president of the organization. Thanks for the remarkable address was extended by the club through James A. Ward.

First in Months

Tuesday evening's meeting of the Men's Club of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was the first dinner meeting for some months. At a recent reorganization meeting Wilfred D. Richardson was named president, Donald C. Sills vice-president and Gordon Byers was elected secretary-treasurer, assisted by a committee comprised of Arthur L. Hill, Gordon H. Trill, and G. Vernon Weir.

Clifford E. Templer rendered a group of three solos before the meeting adjourned, including two very well known Irish airs, to which the club gave hearty applause. Piano accompaniment was performed by Earle Mason.

During the evening group singing of very well selected songs was directed by Lorne Reid with Earle Mason at the piano.

Dinner was provided by Mrs. D. Kane's group of the Women's Guild of the church, under the personal direction of Mrs. Kane, who provided more than amply for more than eighty members in attendance. Mr. George A. Reid ably voiced the thanks of the club for the part the ladies played in making the dinner a success.

Before the president of the club adjourned the meeting, the members present signified their support to a new date for next meeting to be held in the latter part of April. The meeting was adjourned shortly after 8 o'clock.

Dry Conditions Needed for Pavement Repairs

Snowplowed streets meet with 100 per cent approval with the motoring public during the stormy winter months. It is the same motoring public, as well as the taxpayer, who pay for their winter convenience by rough road conditions in the spring.

At least that is the opinion of City Engineer Charles Mott who says that streets plowed bare of snow during the winter are much more susceptible to frost heaving conditions than roadways which remain protected by a snow covering.

The city engineering department is just as aware as the motorist of rough street conditions in the city at present time but the engineer says there is little that can be done to remedy conditions until the streets dry up. Just as soon as the roads dry in the next two or three weeks the Public Works Department will proceed to repair holes with cold patch.

Fill Worst Holes

In the meantime efforts are being made to keep the worst holes filled with crushed rock so as to prevent damage to passing motor vehicles.

City Engineer Mott claims that when roadways are plowed free of snow during the early winter the frost penetrates to a much greater depth. This adds up damage by heaving in the spring and at the same time more expense for the already over-burdened taxpayer.

Builders' Exchange Would Stabilize Carpenters' Wages

Members of the Belleville Builders' Exchange favor stabilization of the carpenters' wage scale at present rates for the next year, it was decided at a meeting of the Exchange held Wednesday evening. Present rate for carpenters in the Belleville area is 85 cents.

In seeking to maintain carpenters' wages at the present level, the local Builders' Exchange voiced their approval of a decision at a meeting of the Federation of Builders' Exchanges and of contractors held in Toronto Tuesday evening. It was felt at the above meeting that wage scales in the building trades should not be increased as this would tend to increase building costs and thus discourage new building.

Toronto Men Attend

Representatives of the Belleville Builders' Exchange, including President Conley, attended the Toronto meeting.

Approximately 15 members of the local builders' exchange attended the Wednesday evening's meeting in the city when it was decided to concur with the decision reached in Toronto with respect to wage rates.

Members of the local carpenters' union had requested an audience with the Belleville Builders' Exchange to discuss wage rates, the date for the meeting being set for last evening. However, the delegation from the carpenters' union failed to attend the meeting. The carpenters' wage rate contract will be up for renewal May 1st.

They are reported out of danger.

Fundamentals Of Banking Taken Up at School

Designed to teach the fundamentals of banking up to the point of tellership first class for city and district employees of the Bank of Montreal opened here on Monday. The school of instruction is for junior members of the bank staff.

A mixed school of eight young women and men is taking the instructions under E. R. H. Tucker, M.B.E., veteran banker with 39 years' experience. He is one of the five instructors conducting similar classes in principal centres across Canada.

The Bank of Montreal's first class of instruction for junior staff members started at head office in Montreal April 1, 1947, when officials made provisions to meet expansion and turnover in staff. Mr. Tucker explained that the bank had to make allowances for a certain percentage of women personnel getting married and leaving the bank while steady growth of the institution likewise called for additional trained help from time to time. The present course of instruction comprises 200 hours practical training into less than three weeks. Public Relations Course

In covering the principles of banking the first stress given was to become familiar with the customers and the bank as part of the policy to build up goodwill. It is a training for personnel to handle the banking public with courtesy while giving the maximum service.

The fact that the trainees are well screened before entering the school involves little room for failures. Very few ever miss the test at the end of the course, to date between 700 and 800 junior staff members have passed through the Bank's schools.

The Bank of Montreal also offers courses in correspondence, intermediate courses for advanced personnel and senior staff courses.

Why Award Made

Asked under what circumstances he was awarded the M.B.E. Mr. Tucker stated that he received the honor for services rendered by Armed Forces especially the R.C.A.F., when he and his staff assisted in the banking problems of 37,500 veteran on discharge from the Toronto Reabilitation Centre.

City and district personnel attending the present class included: Miss M. J. Hurdon, J. C. Hepburn, and Miss Anne Wills, Belleville; W. H. LaMorre, Trenton; F. J. Maloney, Peterborough; K. H. Wilde, Kingston; Miss B. J. Rogers, Frankford; Miss B. C. L. Field, Stirling.

The next class commences on April 12th, with the following: Miss M. G. Goodale, Miss M. S. Bennett, Miss A. F. Burton and Miss Betty Bartlett, Belleville; J. E. Peel, Peterborough; W. H. Hogg, Kingston; Miss B. J. Brown, Trenton; Miss B. J. Reid, Frankford; Miss L. L. Graves, Stirling.

Versatile Bishop Plans To Retire, 59 Years in West

Regina, (CP)— Rt. Rev. Edwin Hubert Knowles, fifth bishop of the Anglican diocese of Qu'Appelle— farmer, trapper, hunter and teacher as a young man — retires April 30.

Bishop Knowles proved up two homesteads in the Saltcoats, Sask. district in sentimental days. He says, laughing, that he can do it again since he turned back his rights to the land when he went into the church.

"But it's not likely I'll take advantage of that right, at my age," he said in an interview. He will be 76 next June 7.

The day after he announced his resignation at a meeting of the diocesan executive committee, he was back at his busy round of duties with interviews, visits and church business.

"But my work in this activity is the fact that as bishop he must travel 20,000 to 30,000 miles a year in his large territory.

"That's another reason I'm retiring," he said. "Traveling is exhausting even in these modern days." In addition, he felt he could not age when he should make way for a younger man.

Bishop Knowles comes from an old English family which for generations contributed sons to the church and the law. He won degrees in both professions—perhaps the only bishop in Canada with that distinction.

In 1907 the widowed mother brought her two sons and daughter to Saltcoats, then in the North west Territories. The sons took up homesteads. Later the family moved to Schlinthorpe district near Calder, being among the first to settle in that district.

Bishop Knowles combined homesteading and teaching for 10 years. Then he was attracted to the church by His Rev. W. C. Burn, second bishop of Qu'Appelle who invited young men of the church settling in the west to serve in the ministry.

For 12 years he was a lay reader at Saltcoats and he studied at St. John's College, Winnipeg. In 1903 he was ordained. While serving at Buffalo Lake, near Moose Jaw, and Kemsack, he studied law. University of Manitoba gave him his degree in 1909.

Soon he became secretary of the Qu'Appelle diocesan synod, a post he held until appointed bishop in 1935. His territory covers 90,000 square miles, in which the Anglican church counts 75,000 adherents. Of the 123 parishes, 22 were vacant when Bishop Knowles took over. Thirty-four are self-supporting now.

Bishop Knowles help keep young the bishop said, explaining his resignation at 75. One of his is astronomy; another photography. For a third hobby, he cuts and polishes stones.

Soccer and cricket have been his sports interests. For years he was one of the west's better batsmen and was a member of the Saltcoats cricket team which was best in the province.

Bishop Knowles and his wife have made no plans yet for his life in retirement. They have been married since 1902. The bishop's brother stayed with farmer and staff until 1930, Bishop Mark. His sister, Mrs. Peter Fraser, lives at Kelvington, Sask. The Knowles have one son—E. H. M. Knowles, a lawyer at Regina.

$33 Million Deficit for CNR Seen in 1950

Ottawa, Mar. 23 (CP) — The Canadian National Railways' budget for 1950 looks for a deficit of $33,000,000, the Royal Commission on Transportation was told today. The deficit for 1949 was $42,000,000.

T. H. Cooper, vice-president and comptroller, gave this information to the commission under examination on a company plan proposed last week for a $1,000,000,000 reorganization in the capital structure of the government-owned railway.

If this plan were put into effect as of the start of this year, Mr. Cooper said, it would result in transforming the deficit — under present conditions — into a surplus of about $2,000,000.

But Mr. Cooper emphasized that there was no certainty these conditions would continue. For one thing, he said, the company now is engaged in wage negotiations with employees who seek concessions running into many millions of dollars.

Calculated at freight-rate levels in existence when the C.N.R. budget was drawn up, Mr. Cooper said, it anticipated a deficit of $44,000,000. But to this 7.4 per cent general rate increase, going into effect today, was expected to cut this figure by $11,000,000.

Atlantic Storms Delay Liners

New York, March 23. (AP)— Blasting storms which raised mountainous seas the entire breadth of the North Atlantic continued to disrupt shipping schedules today.

Gen. O. Bradley Visits The Hague

Washington, March 23—(AP)— Gen. Omar Bradley leaves today by plane for The Hague, The Netherlands, to go over regional defense plans with top military representatives of the 12 Atlantic Treaty allies.

Prior to his departure Bradley conferred with State Secretary Dean Acheson. Francis H. Russell, State Department's Director of Public Affairs, said Wednesday that Acheson will visit London, probably in May, to discuss pact defence problems.

Bradley, chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, will preside at a meeting of the military committee of the North Atlantic Treaty countries March 28. The announced purpose of this conference is to consider the accomplishments of the regional planning groups. These groups are planning for the defence of Northern Europe, Western Europe, Southern Europe, North America and the North Atlantic Ocean.

Hubert E. Howard, chairman of the U.S. Maritime Board, left Washington for The Hague earlier this month to preside over a meeting of the military production and supply board of the North Atlantic Treaty organization.

Defence Secretary Louis Johnson will leave Tuesday to preside over a meeting of the treaty defence committee in The Hague on April 1.

In place at a time when $1,000,000,000 of United States arms aid is beginning to flow to European members in the North Atlantic Alliance.

One Like "Belb"

Saint John, N.B. (CP) — Mrs. Len Gilliland today reported seeing a "flying saucer" above her farm at nearby Fairvale. She said her son Andy, 9, first noticed the object Thursday. She described it as looking like a single globe, white and luminous like a light bulb, with a long horizontal tail behind it.

Hamilton (CP) — An object sighted in the sky over Lake Ontario Saturday afternoon by four Fruitland residents may have been a balloon containing radar and other scientific and photographic equipment which broke away from its moorings at Minneapolis.

Following news reports which described the object as a "flying saucer", one of the four, Stanley Puddenhan, received a telegram from Minneapolis asking him to telephone a complete description. The Minneapolis party said that Trenton, Ariz., March 23—(AP) —A United States air force B-50 bomber with 14 men aboard was reported down today near Gila Bend, Ariz. About 125 miles west of here.

Fate of the personnel aboard was not immediately known.

The public information officer of the airforce base here said the only report received was that the big plane was "down in the Gila Bend area."

TRAINER DENIES REPORT

Juarez, Mexico, March 23—(AP) —While Joe Louis, former heavyweight boxing champion, slept this morning, his trainer, Manny Seamon, denied a report Joe would seek another match with Ezzard Charles.

Seamon said "there will be no announcement until March 25 or later."

Louis was resting from two four-round exhibition bouts Wednesday night in nearby El Paso, Tex. The retired champ has another exhibition tomorrow night and one Saturday night, then plans a week in California before making an extended exhibition tour of South America.

IMPROVEMENT IN FEBRUARY

February, it is pleasant news to hear, made a better record on the highway this year than January and February of last year. But even with the fewer deaths the toll remains tragic. Thirty-three died in traffic accidents in Ontario in February as compared with 51 in January and 58 in February of the year before.

The 33 persons who died in road mishaps seem a large group and ten of the 33 victims were children.

Even though the tragedies are fewer in number, every effort should be and will be made to cut this 33 down so greatly that it will have such an influence upon the minds of the people that there will be a continuous effort on the part of every driver to use the highways and roads of Ontario with complete safety.

It will be a happy day for every part of the motoring world when traffic will proceed so wisely that accidents will be a rarity. It is surely not too much to hope for that kind of skill will be achieved. That can be done with every motorist, every occupant of a car and every pedestrian doing the reasonable and utmost to bring in such an age of safety.

FABULOUS TREASURES

One of the greatest attractions at the Tower of London is the Crown Jewels, those priceless pieces of royal regalia that burn and glitter in their cases and hold the enthralled gaze of Londoners, provincials and foreigners alike. There lie the crowns, sceptres and ornaments, symbols of all the pomp and majesty of royalty, enriched by diamonds, emeralds and rubies of untold value, almost unbelievably precious and rare.

The Jewel House has recently been closed for three days whilst the Crown Jewels have undergone their annual cleaning. Cecil Mann, a director of the firm which does the job, has described how the BBC team took note of what precautions are taken during the process. First the burglar alarm is disconnected. The jewels lie in a glass-covered case protected by a steel cage and this is raised, the main door opened and the jewels taken out piece by piece and carefully cleaned and polished. While the cleaning is going on the Jewel House is guarded by a yeoman warder who stands on guard inside and an army sentry is outside. Two more warders are on duty inside the Jewel House and the proceedings are watched by the Yeoman-Keeper of the Jewels, Sergeant Major Trott. These elaborate precautions are taken to make sure that no one should attempt to repeat the exploit of Colonel Blood, who nearly got away with the Crown Jewels in King Charles the Second's reign.

This royal treasure is of fabulous value and absolutely irreplaceable and the cleaners who work on it possess the highest skill. They are all men who have completed five years' apprenticeship in this branch of the jeweller's craft and they enjoy the job and take great pride in getting rid of the tarnish which is inevitable in the damp Thames-side atmosphere of the Tower. This dampness oxidizes the silver settings of the Crown Jewels which with constant cleaning over years become frail and insecure. Because of it Queen Victoria's State Crown made for her in 1838 was found to be worn out in 1937 and had to be re-made in the same form for the present King. The fifty or more pieces of the Crown Jewels are seldom worn and usually remain in the Jewel House in the Tower, but one of the few occasions on which they are seen is at the opening of Parliament, when the King wears the Imperial State Crown and the Queen the Queen's Crown, which holds the famous and superbly beautiful Kohinoor diamond.

TARZAN AND LITTLE NELL

Writers who entertain youth, maturity and age on a wide assortment of reading fare, admit the appeal of the late Edgar Rice Burroughs the novelist as one who knew how to prepare the fare of the jungle for the people of his age. In this the author was the master hand who created an imaginary world which has given delight and entertainment man and woman and child would have missed had not't been for Edgar Rice Burroughs.

"We dare to think," says the Ottawa Journal, that the name Tarzan will live when many of the great thoughts of economists and statisticians have withered into dust. Tarzan beating his chest after the kill represented the triumphant, primitive male.

Impressions of Britain

BRITISH WEATHER

By RALPH CAMPBELL

Oxford, England, Special—Just as on conversation would be complete without some remarks about the weather, so no series of articles would be adequate without discussing that topic especially when it concerns Britain and Britain. There have been so many jokes about British weather that one tends to laugh at it and tolerate it in much the same way as one does the more irritating peculiarities of a dear friend. But occasionally the joke loses a bit there and one is led to say, "This is no joke!"

Since last September we have experienced what most people refer to as a bad winter, unusual even in years. Retelling the many times during my service here with the RCAF that I had been caught in a sudden shower without a rain-coat, until at last I learned to carry a 'macintosh' even on the gardenest of days, has little meaning my wife with the usual "It rains at least once a day here." Then in the three weeks after our arrival it rained only once.

With stories of swirling fog that kept us grounded in East Anglia for three days in 1944, it is rather then later that year for two more weeks of fog to descend, followed by the failure of any fog to remain longer than one night. With memories of bone cold that seemed to penetrate buildings and clothes, even a sub-zero marrow, and which used to send us to bed in our great flying suits, I had portrayed the chill and discomfort that accompany the British winter. But it is only fair, at least, the last two months have been unbelievably too accurate in prediction.

No Temperature Extremes

The presence of large bodies of water assures that there will be no extremes of temperature such as we experience in Canada. The lowest temperature for the last year at Oxford has been about 24 degrees, a temperature which we would call no more than cool in Ontario. Yet the dampness and the cold, and lack of insulation and central heating in the houses make for some fairly chilly nights of the days when it used to be above the freezing 32 degrees outside, instead of 35 outside and 50 inside.

The freedom from severe frosts is a great boon to all sections of the population. All during the winter farmers have been plowing their fields; cabbages planted last autumn are looking strong and healthy, gardens are being put in condition and beans are already planted (Feb. 11). Most of the crops are as they were last autumn and in the field across from my window, a herd of dairy cattle have never once been taken out, although a few loads of straw and hay have been given to them.

Advantage To Farmers

It is not hard to realize the advantages such weather holds for British agriculture; not so much fodder is needed for winter feeding; sheds and cattles take the place of expensive and well-built barns and stables; and winter grains never suffer from frost killing. On the other hand, there is the ever-present wet ground to contend with, and hot days in summer to permit British farmers or gardeners to get out and reap the crop perhaps a rather sickly row or two on the south side of a protecting wall. The absence of those hot dry weeks in July and August that normally turn Ontario fields brown and dry, allows the British countryside to remain a beautiful green all year round.

The mild winters make a great deal of difference to everyone; water pipes are uncovered, and the drains are also six inches deep for protection from breakage rather than frosts, one seems to have storm windows or doors, or to insulate houses. It is a very great difference to construction costs, too, when concrete can be poured easily in winter as in summer, with no protection for freezing overnight. Snowplows are rare enough in the north, but are unknown in southern England. That is why a freak storm causes such chaos and paralyzing beans about orthopedics. A "nurse" may grace a doctor's office for years on end without knowing up from down about medicine. Then, suddenly, ten or twelve years in intensive training in an effort to learn the basic fundamentals of disease; his opinions are cautious and reserved. He is constantly perplexed and his days are spent in professional consultation on problems that beset him. He is ever-ready to ask for consultation with other physicians, never to commit himself to a promise that he might not keep, or to a step he make good. He is so acutely aware of his limitations of skill and knowledge—great in the aggregate as it might be—that the simplest question or condition stalls him off on a train of thought which he considers incomprehensible to the amateur.

But the amateur, he knows all instantly. There is no waiting and no delay. Questions, simple and direct, are put before him. He will be delighted to ply you with advice — even if you don't want it. He never stands the least chance of knowing what doesn't deter him. He speaks with the voice of self-evidently authority— derived from the Dream Book, Dr. Gallup's Guide to Good Health, Medical Advisor, the "health hour," on the Corn Brother's National Barn Dance radio program, and from the fact that he was born to a hospital and knows all about doctors.

There is one very good and simple rule that everyone can follow. If the amateur starts to sound off —just ignore him. If you pay any attention to an amateur you prove that you are sillier than he is. Waste no time listening to the conclusions of a person who knows all because his sister-in-law "had the same thing," or because he has a cousin who is similar instance in which the doctor "couldn't understand it at all."

If you don't feel right, look up a doctor. When the amateur hands off, just yawn and walk away.

THE AMATEUR DOCTOR — A SOCIAL MENACE

The amateur is the bane of the real doctor's existence. The amateur is found everywhere. He gives his opinions sagely and freely and he is always willing to sit talking about but he reveals in the attention he gets from others, perhaps better informed than he himself. He derives an almost sadistic pleasure from the fear he can ignite in the minds of apprehensive listeners. His blithe and ignorant comments cause victims of disease to ignore their rightful advantage of skilled help so thus competent medical care which is readily available. He makes the confidence of the patient in his physician seem a thing of the cost and burden of the patient's misery.

Scarcely a day passes that some miserable person does not turn up at a doctor's office to "look me up," and to hear the official pronouncement of his impending doom—all the product of the folly of the amateur doctor. The amateur announces in a voice of finality a certain sign is a sure indication of tuberculosis, or cancer, or even diabetes or some other ailment that he doesn't know anything about. The amateur is a meddlesome, ignorant, trouble-making nuisance and an abomination to mankind. There should be a law to suppress him. Failing that necessary, to keep his loose mouth shut.

A woman may have twelve children and not know a blooming thing about obstetrics, or she may have twelve assorted fractures at the same time and not know anything about orthopedics. A "nurse" may grace a doctor's office for years on end without knowing up from down about medicine. Then, suddenly, ten or twelve years in intensive training in an effort to learn the basic fundamentals of disease; his opinions are cautious and reserved. Strength for the Day

DR. EARL I. DOUGLASS

A PREACHER SPEAKS ON HEALTH

Physicians bitterly resent and rightfully so, the medical advice gratuitously handed out by layman. Many times the well meant suggestions by a minister on health fundamentals are not only probably every physician will agree.

Many diseases — probably most diseases — are caused by infection, injury, or something in no way related to mind or spirit. But many people are sick because of the way they think they maintain. An even greater number fall ill because of a disturbed spiritual life. Stomach ulcers, coronary occlusions, dyspepsia very often have a moral and spiritual origin.

Therefore avoid anxiety, anger, malice, jealousy, and evil thoughts. Practice cheerfulness, good will, tolerance and patience— especially patience with yourself. Remember that the Lord's Prayer does not ask to absorb poisons such as alcohol, and although some people can build up considerable tolerance of this sort, it is undoubtedly not a recipe for other vital functions.

Finally remember two things; first, that it is better to call the doctor in time than to wait until it is too late to see whether you will call the doctor or the family will call the undertaker. Second, bear in mind that we are primarily spiritual beings, that the body is but a vehicle and temporary and that the spirit is eternal.

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

It is a queer thing that friendship or friendly relationship should be of the greatest prejudice to efficient business management. Business industry spend a lot of money and effort to develop the friendliest spirit amongst their clientele, and a lot of money is often an investment.

When you walk into a grocery store the way you are an old and familiar customer, you expect to be singled out of the mob and treated in the way the spirit of intimacy characteristic of friendship. And usually you are; but the efficiency of that particular store is damaged if five other customers, who are strangers, happen to observe the favoritism and take offence.

When you drive into a garage, where you know Bill and Joe and Archie the boss, you expect, and you usually get, prompt service, though the efficient management of the garage is entirely disrupted by your special claims.

In big business, the friends of it on visiting days are free to come in and consume time, kid the staff, interrupt routine, break up conferences and generally make themselves at home and declare a half holiday thereby.

The man who has been getting all up and exploiting the past fifteen years is a curmudgeon. I feel he would come to my place if he knows I will come to his, if he beats me to it. We are all alike. But never in my life have I got my shoes back a day ahead of anybody else. If a friend brings his car in for work being taken in today is to be finished by tomorrow, not tomorrow. The man is incapable in his work, of any sentiment for or against it. It is all gets the best that is in him, including mine. He is an efficient man. He does beautiful work. He is a curmudgeon. He has a lot of friends.

Law enforcement officials urgently needed some legal means of ending improper use of telegraph and other communication services.

"Some serious thought and positive action might very well be undertaken by the authorities of legislative bodies concerned," the commissioner said.

Twenty-two telephones had been seized in raids on betting houses, he said. In some cases telephones were used exclusively for transmitting horse-racing information.

There were 396 prosecutions, 356 convictions, 32 dismissals and nine withdrawals in connection with betting charges. Fines imposed totalled $19,505 and money seized $9,911.

Unlawful Betting Big Business Says Police Head

Toronto, March 23. (CP)—Unlawful betting has become big business in Ontario Commissioner W. H. Stringer of the Ontario Provincial Police said Wednesday in his annual report for 1949 tabled in the legislature.

For some people illegal gambling has become their principal, tax-free, lucrative livelihood, the report said. "Some even book-makers in every major town and city in the province. There was daily communication between

Cargo Tonnage Much Higher Than in 1948

Ottawa, March 23. (CP)—Traffic and revenues of harbors administered by the National Harbors Board showed improvement during 1949.

Transport Minister Chevrier Wednesday tabled in the Commons the annual report of the Board. It showed that cargo tonnage was 4 per cent higher than in 1948 and revenues 10 per cent.

The report said a large increase in grain shipments contributed to the improvement. In addition, petroleum and its products, metallic coal, cement and iron ore moved in greater quantities. However, there were decreases in bit -uminous coal, lumber, pulpwood, logs, wood-pulp, wheat flour and general cargo.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

UNSUSPECTED VISTAS

It's the unsuspected in life that gives us such a lift. I once drove up the famous mountain highway in California, and then across the Rocky Mountains, through the Great Divide and on into Montana. Every mile was filled with unsuspected vistas.

I have before me as I write a letter from a reader, who is a worker in the Mesta Machine organization in Homestead, Pennsylvania. He says that he is a Roll Turner, and that he has sent me some pictures to make it plain as to his work.

He writes that "It is work, just a job as most of them are, but somehow it has given me more than steel come from a finished roll. You see, I'm a worker. The rolls I have turned have gone to every country in the world and there is no way of knowing in what completed thing they have had part in. There is something in knowing that you are useful."

And he continues: "As the tool digs deep into the steel, the turnings roll come off in long bands of beautiful colors and intricate designs, smaller, jealousy, and evil thoughts. Practice cheerfulness, good will, tolerance and patience— especially patience with yourself. Remember that the Lord's Prayer does not ask to absorb poisons such as alcohol, and although some people can build up considerable tolerance of this sort, it is undoubtedly not a recipe for other vital functions.

Finally remember two things; first, that it is better to call the doctor in time than to wait until it is too late to see whether you will call the doctor or the family will call the undertaker. Second, bear in mind that we are primarily spiritual beings, that the body is but a vehicle and temporary and that the spirit is eternal.

Mackenzie's Column Sees War Not Probable in Near Future

(Editor's note: This column is presented as an indication of American opinion on major world events.)

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press News Analyst)

A colleague having an analytical turn of mind laid a picture on my desk with the remark:

"Does this picture of Soviet Russia is afraid there's going to be war?"

The photo showed a model of Moscow's projected University building. The structure, to be one of a dozen "skyscrapers being built in the Russian capital.

No, it doesn't indicate Moscow fears atomic bombardment. The answer can be said of the United States, where one can see numerous buildings going up towards the sky, or London where much construction is proceeding.

Nobody believes Moscow or London or Washington, or any other great capital, is preparing believed that war is imminent. They all know that it is possible, but they think it isn't probable in the near future.

Why?

Dr. Millikan's View

Dr. Robert A. Millikan, Nobel Prize winning scientist of Pasadena, California, gave a good reason Wednesday in an interview commemorating his 82nd birthday. He said he isn't at all certain that man can make a hydrogen bomb, but having learned dealt with this fearsome weapon he believes he will not believe that war is imminent. They all know that it is possible, but they think it isn't probable in the near future.

TRENTON

Chest Clinic First Group to Use Hospital

Trenton (Special) — Yesterday marked a milestone in the history of Trenton when the Trenton and District Memorial Hospital was used for the first time.

Forty-five people received free government clinic service from the Provincial Chest Clinic, which was held in the hospital Wednesday, instead of the Canterbury Hall, where it is usually held.

The first chest x-ray was taken of Mayor Kennedy. Council followed by Mr. Wm. Ireland.

Dr. E. A. McQuade said that when the hospital is completed there will be a room set aside to contain permanent x-ray equipment. The equipment used Wednesday was portable, as the clinic headquarters for this district are in Belleville.

The next Chest Clinic will be held at the hospital April 18th., and there will be one every month from then on.

Fishermen Gather Forces to Capture Share of Markets

Ottawa, March 23 (CP) —Canadian fishermen began marshalling their forces today for an all-out drive to capture a larger share of the domestic and world markets for their products.

Spurred by government undertakings to aid in fisheries research, conservation and marketing, The Fisheries Council of Canada Wednesday placed itself on record as willing to make "a maximum effort to carry out its share of the responsibilities to attain full and effective use of this country's fish resources.

J. H. MacKichan of Halifax, newly-elected council president announced passage of the council's maximum-effort resolution at a dinner meeting Wednesday night marking the close of the organization's fifth annual two-day meeting.

In closed sessions Wednesday, delegates from Newfoundland to British Columbia heard Stewart Bates, Deputy Minister of Fisheries, outline government plans to set up within a short time a separate fish inspection division.

Mr. Bates said the government was ready to work along with the industry in determining what joint efforts could be taken to build up quality fish products for all markets.

M. W. MacKenzie, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce outlined the difficulties of currency exchange in the expansion of trade with other countries.

Sir Leonard Outerbridge, Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland emphasized the need for provincial and federal aid in the fisheries research field.

It was doubtful, he said, if private capital could find the means to finance erection of modern refrigeration plants, the securing of expensive trawlers and draggers and building of by-product plants for fish now required.

Air Frames Win Sixardee Station Hockey Title

The Air Frames team of No. 8 Repair Depot, RCAF yesterday won the championship of the Station Hockey League, defeating the Senior NCO's team by a 3-2 score in Memorial Arena. The league was composed of four teams, Headquarters, Combines, NCO's and A.R.S.

The game was closely fought with the losers tying the score at two-all in the third period only to have Air Frame fire the winning goal with eight minutes to go.

Wagner scored the only goal of the first period banging home the puck unassisted after six minutes of strenuous play. Air Frames made it two nothing early in the second period, Simmons scoring from McConkey's pass. Cassidy broke the scoring ice for NCO's midway through the session taking Andy Christie's pass to make the count 2-1.

Cassidy scored his second goal of the game in the third period to knot the count and play speeded up as both teams strove to break the deadlock. Air Frames came through at the 11-minute mark when Lalonde scored, and successfully held off the opposing threat to win the game and the station title.

The Teams:

Senior N.C.O.'s—goal, Robert; defence, Joel, Cassidy; centre, Christie; wings, Wentzloff, Cross; subs, Cole, Kleinsteuber, Bucklaski, Pratt, Russell, Fuller, Gray.

Air Frames—goal, Todd; defence, Garrett, Hunter; centre, Goodwin; wings, Lalonde, Wagner, Mc Conkey, Simms, Adsit, Anaka, Thomas, McConkey, McKinnon.

A GREAT LIFE WHILE IT LASTED

Well, you'd look surprised too, if an eight-year-old boy handed you a $50 bill for a chocolate bar. Storekeeper Charles Tuckwell, of Wausau, Wisc., reported to police that two boys, Thomas Chmielzinski and Ronal Haggerty, ages eight and six, were flashing a roll of $50 and $100 bills. The boys had found a purse containing $2,890 in bills and were having a great time in candy stores and soda fountains. The purse, and other money totalling $19,781.10, were lost by Mrs. Edna Voight, who dropped it in a Milwaukee park. — Central Press Canadian.

Quebec Needs No Lessons on Social Justice

(By the Canadian Press)

Labor Minister Antonio Barrette says Quebec has no lessons to learn about "Social Justice" but can give them.

In the provincial legislature Wednesday the 51-year-old Quebec minister reviewed the government's labor record over five years and then said: "It is in Quebec that true social justice is practised."

He made references in his hour-long address to "Christian social justice," subject earlier in the week of a collective pastoral letter by Roman Catholic Archbishops and Bishops of Quebec.

"People may come to take lessons here, but let no one come to give us any."

Quoting figures on wage increases in Quebec province since 1945, he said the total boost "of workers' pay adds up to $620,000,000." Wages in the building industry in Montreal and Quebec city have gone up by 50 per cent., in the textile industry by 60 per cent and in the pulp-and-paper industry by 66 per cent.

Mr. Barrette said when the union nationale administration came to power in 1944, 183,714 Quebec workers belonged to 833 labor unions but the figures have risen to 1,118 unions with 229,458 member.

Rebukes Government

In the Nova Scotia legislature, Robert L. Stanfield, Progressive Conservative opposition leader, rebuked the province's Liberal government for what he called an "attitude of helplessness" in the face of rising unemployment.

In the New Brunswick legislature, Premier McNair said the government plans to impose a consumpy tax on goods sold at retail level. He did not announce the tax rate. The sale tax would apply to "tangible personal property," the premier said, and would correspond in essence to the province's tobacco and gasoline taxes.

Shortly afterward, Angus MacLeod, president of the New Brunswick council of labor (C.C.L.) said the council "intends to contact every trade union in the province, requesting the unions to send representatives to Fredericton to oppose the sales tax when it is being considered in committee."

Critical of Government

In the Newfoundland legislature, D. I. Jackman, a Progressive Conservative, said that Canada is "only a satellite of the United States and Newfoundland is just a pullet of Ottawa." He criticized the government for "a policy of expediency," and blamed Newfoundland unemployment on confederation.

Premier Manning of Alberta, said a new bond issue of $60,000,000 sold in New York Wednesday went at the lowest rate of interest in the province's financial history and represented refunding of $61,067,300 Alberta bonds called and retired.

The bonds, maturing in three groups, will yield an average interest rate of 2.79 per cent. The costs of the deal will bring this rate to 2.09 per cent, he said. In the Saskatchewan legislature, Harry Biggs (C.C.F.—Swift Current) reiterated his stand for a plebiscite to determine whether the people prefer a state-run lottery to the new three-per-cent sales tax to make up the province's hospitalization plan deficit.

He said a lottery is "one way of raising money without compulsion."

PICTON

Wife of Reeve Opposes Hubby On Health Grant

Picton, Mar. 23 (Special)—Fate of Prince Edward Health Unit will be decided at County Council today, two months ago, the council voted to discontinue the grant to the unit as of April 1st, with economy as the chief reason. Cost to the county was $11,000 last year with the government paying a like sum.

Picton Home and School Association, represented by fifteen women, presented a petition bearing 1,188 signatures. Several branches of the Women's Institutes and other organizations sent resolutions asking that the grant be continued.

Speaking for Bloomfield W.I. Mrs. Morley Jackson questioned if money would be saved. She pointed out that prevention is cheaper than cure, and that a return to a medical officer of health in each township would be costly and less effective.

Mrs. Colin Carter, for the Home and School Association, said the work benefited ages "Cost of she Unit is about 67 cents per capita per year, and the cost of sickness has never been counted." she said.

Mrs. F. J. Webster, member of the Health Board, felt that though economy might be essential, the matter of public health should not be affected. As to complaints, she thought some were justified, and that some came from those whom "toes have been stepped on", in matters of health or sanitation.

Desirable Work

Mrs. Allan Wease supported the request of the Institutes. Public School Inspector A. H. Brown said he felt the Health Unit is 'a very desirable work and thought that some came from those whom "toes have been stepped on", in matters of health or sanitation.

Mrs. Hugh MacDonald, wife of Reeve MacDonald, who previously opposed the grant, referred to men's interest in improving farm stock by suitable health measures and toxoids. She compared the work to one by which "human stock" is improved. The women have greater knowledge than men concerning health, and should promote children's health, and the mothers' interests in the service now given, she declared.

Dr. Struthers, provincial representative, said the control of the Unit and level of the salaries paid, is in the hands of the local Health Unit Board. "There are now 24 units operating in Ontario," he said, "and the Department feels that they are doing an excellent job, with much more effective work, better coverage of all angles of public health, and much more value to the taxpayer than in the former system of public health officers."

Discounted Value of Petitions

Warden Norris Whitney said that it was stimulating to see the interest of women in this work.

Reeve H. MacDonald discounted the value of petitions and he was joined in this thought by Reeve J. K. Welsh.

Deputy Reeve Tom Walker disagreed with their interpretation of the value of petitions. "It depends upon the care with which they are made and signed," he said. Under the Municipal Act there are proceedings set up which require petitions, he pointed out.

Council did not discuss the matter in front of the ladies who were given a friendly reception. But their departure was the signal for an outburst by a few councillors. One spectator who was holding the door against the wind, suddenly cut short his objections when he noted that several women had returned to listen, thanked the vacated and sat down.

The disagreement between Reeve MacDonald and his wife over the unit brought a humorous moment in Council. After she had presented her case, the Reeve rejoined: "I would like to compliment that lady for her forceful presentation of her views. She can be twice as forceful at other times too."

Council today will also decide on requests for grants, including $5,000 for construction of a Legion hall at Wellington, $1,200 for the Federation of Agriculture, $5,000 for Prince Edward County hospital, and $1,000 for the Salvation Army.

Assef Files Notice of Appeal

Windsor, Ont., March 23 — Joseph Assef, convicted bootlegger, has filed notice of appeal of his six-months sentence for keeping liquor for sale.

In the notice, Assef charges Magistrate J. Arthur Hanrahan with bias, and claims his sentence was imposed on the grounds of "extraneous matters," including bandbooking and gambling, with which he had no connection.

The now-notorious Assef case touched off an investigation of charges of corruption in Windsor police department.

Assef's appeal, it is reliably reported, will be heard by an out-of-town judge. The appeal, he notes that his sentence was the maximum and terms it out of proportion to the offence.

MARIO . . . In his distinctive feature about Food . . . What's Cooking?

By the author of "THE FACE IN THE ASPIC"

Men spend 20 cents out of every food dollar.

It seems like an insignificant role for father, it might be pointed out that the latest figure represents an advancement for the male population of three cents over its previous position.

Not only do males spend their 20 cents unaided but they help decide, in a modest way, what mama should buy in 26 per cent of all food purchases.

Evidence of manly interest in the weekly market basket was all brought out in statistical evidence collected by Prof. Paul D. Converse and Hope Cranford at the University of Illinois. More men and women in the middle income group, buy food together than in any other group. In smaller towns more wives shop and visit stores than do their brethren in big cities.

Men who would learn the fine art of buying could do no better than to start with apples.

The best baking apples, for instance, are the variety called Rome Beauty. They should have a light red skin, should be firm and free from any bruises or marks of dry rot. Although many other varieties of apples can be bought for baking, these are the best for holding their shape, for tenderness and flavor.

Baked Glazed Apples. 6 Servings

Wash 6 large Rome Beauty apples. Use apple corer to remove cores and stems, if there are any sharp ends left in core centre, use a knife to remove them.

Cut off 1 inch of skin from top of each apple. Save cores and skin.

Place apples, top side down in a metal baking dish. The dish just large enough to hold apples. Add enough hot water to cover apples half way up.

Add 2 tablespoons granulated sugar for each apple. Place baking dish over a top flame (not in oven) and simmer slowly until the sections of apples immersed in water are tender. Reverse apples so that top sides are up. Continue to cook over top flame for 10 minutes.

Place pan in a hot oven 400 degrees. Bake 30 minutes or longer until apples are very tender when pierced with fork. Spoon juice over apples frequently while baking.

Make a glaze to spread over apples as follows: Chop cores and peelings. Combine with 1 cup of canned fruit juice and 1-4 cup sugar. Bring to a boil. Simmer 20 minutes or until syrup is thick. Put syrup through a fine strainer. Cool. Spread or brush over baked apples.

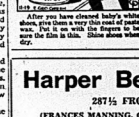
Bride-to-be Honored by Fifteen Friends



Last evening fifteen girl friends met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Button, 10 Everett Street, to honor their daughter, Gene, with a delightful miscellaneous shower on the occasion of her approaching marriage in April.

Miss June Munns was receptionist and welcomed the guests into an atmosphere gay with pink, blue and white streamers, and vari-colored balloons which sprinkled the ceiling like so many spring flowers.

The evening was spent in the making of a colorful bride's book and in a general get-together.

After the bride's book had been completed, Gene was escorted to the seat of honor, a chair having a huge white bow on the back, which was placed before the blue, pink and white decorated, fireplace, from which was suspended by white, pink and blue satin ribbons a sprinkling can, with ribbons of the same colors running from the spout. Upon the hearth floor with its covering of white, and frill of ruffled pink, the gifts were placed. After these had been unwrapped and each one thanked for her gift and for the kind wish for the bride-to-be's future happiness, refreshments were served by Mrs. Roy Sherring and Miss Lorraine Gladwell.

Sampling an Irish Meal In New York on St. Patrick's Day is Really an Adventure

By LAVONIA STOCKELBACH

New York (Special)— It seem- a good idea to go to a certain well-known restaurant in 32rd St. in New York to dine on St. Patrick's Day. It was an Irish place and an Irish lady had come over to supervise the bill of fare, and see that everything was properly and typically Irish. Not having found any typical Irish Irish cooking in Eire I was all set to eat, to learn, and to talk about it.

As I read the list of foods, and, although it was a Friday saw chiefly meat dishes, I remarked casually to the head waiter that we had a dispensation for today. He answered reverently in his soft Irish voice that Cardinal Spellman had given dispensation for the day, so the green light was turned on for ham and duck and an orange light for a wee bit of greediness that goes with festivals, and in this case, was terribly needed to cope with a million other people looking at a hundred thousand in the parade and to fight against a very disrespectful wind that blew through the caverns between the cross-town buildings into Fifth Ave.

Cocktail—With a Sting

First would I try a St. Patrick cocktail? Sure no harm could come to one on the saint's day so we ordered one and a most pretty and more ladylike cocktail could not be found, a sweetly delicate green with a bit of creamy foam on top. I have an idea there was also a little alcohol in it! Passing over the prawns in clover, we chose the Golden Vale soup. The Golden Vale is a beautiful valley in Tipperary and if you climb the central tower of that superb cathedral of Cashel, of which we have spoken in these articles, you have a sweeping view of that whole wide valley with the perfect Round Tower towards the north. As I sipped my strong hot soup I silently dedicated that sunlit vista, one that will last while memory lasts.

If the main course some had chosen Ham Garrgower but I do not care for the Irish way of curing hams and bacon so chose duck, called Laha Sloda, with Colcannon.-There is a little village called Labasheeda across the Shannon from Foynes and the first is the Irish way of spelling, the pronounciation is the same. Whether the duck actually came from that vicinity, or from Long Island, where they used to be almost as plentiful as sparrows, I do not know, but nowhere could a better duck be found, grown to a respectable size and roasted to perfection, with thin slivers of potato and turnip in the brown sauce, Colcannon—the first part of the word means kale—is a mixture of potatoes, cabbage and onion boiled together and put through a coarse sieve. It is a pleasant way to serve the potatoes though any of the spring greens could be used, and it went well with the plain substantial though tender creature and it was not embowered in fat.

Not Much in Common

The Tara salad was merely lettuce and watercress with cream very stuffed with sorrel, a green called oseille and used much by the French, and about as tasty as most greens are. The connection with Tara I could not make out.

For dessert there was what was called Irish apple cake— a mystery. Was it to be like the Danish apple—cake, or just apple pie, or what. The mystery was soon solved. It was a highly spiced compote, a delicious and rich type of what the menu called shortcake but really was a most delicate pastry and served with cream.

Tea was chosen to drink with the meal but the men chose what was called Gaelic Coffee. They were welcome to it—a strong coffee laced with Irish whiskey and a heavy cream whipped cream served at the side. I have always stood in awe of man's courage and to see three heads bent low over their cups looked like some new ritual of grace, though it was only to get a whiff of the whiskey. Apparently all was well and three smiling faces reappeared, and liberal quantities of whipped cream were saddled into the coffee. Awful! Upon asking them if they were sure it was Irish and not Scotch or Bourbon they all frankly admitted they did not know.

But as for its being Gaelic! So we parted with mutual wishes for a continuing happy St. Patrick's Day, but that was not to be.

Police Cross Up Plans

It was the intention to go up to the Metropolitan Museum for the parade had been forgotten, and what I wanted to do and what the police wanted me to do, did not jibe. The bars were lifted aside and we were shov'd across Fifth Ave., where I did not want to go but dinner had made me feel so comfortable I did not want to get into an argument with the Irish minions of the law. So we joined the other 999,998 people and for some time watched the hundred thousand in the parade which included five bands of Irish bagpipers. It seemed to me that the "Down with England" banners did not arouse such hearty cheers as formerly, perhaps, that was only wishful thinking!

Finally thoughts of home became insistent and I now wanted to go down Fifth Ave. but the police would not let us do that so we went to St. Patrick's Cathedral where the "mighty" of New York were stationed, that is the politicos were there. Included the Irish Mayor from Mayo County, Ireland, "over whose dead body only will there be a greeting to the Protestant Sir Basil Brooke from Belfast." The Irish have such a hearty way of speaking.

At last with veils askew, souls bedraggled, and a complete disinterest in politics, the wearing of the green, and the sidetalks of New York, we reached the haven of our homeward-bound bus.

MOIRA W. A.

Moira — The March meeting of Moira W. A. was held at the home of Mrs. James Vandewater with a good attendance. A delicious pot luck dinner was served at noon. The president, Mrs. Thompson, took charge of the meeting. Scripture reading from Proverbs 31:10 was read by Mrs. Charlie Morland. Minutes of last meeting were read and roll call was answered with, "Worship". Business followed with discussions on raising money. It was decided to send a donation to the Hospital for Sick Children.

Miss Eleanor Hilbert, leader of Group 3, had charge of the following program: reading by Mrs. Blake Ketcheson, "The Perfect Maid"; piano solo by Mrs. Morley Clark, "Humoresque" which was much enjoyed. the topic from second chapter of study book, "In our Evangel", was ably given by Mrs. A. M. Henry; solo by Mrs. Angus Mumby and a reading by Mrs. Wesley Farrel, "The Tapestry Weaver", Mrs. Thompson closed the meeting.

White Milan Bonnet

By ALICE ALDEN

WHILE the saucy sailor seems to be the big spring millinery attraction, the bonnie bonnet is doing very nicely. It should be, when it records the benefit of a Walter Florel interpretation such as this. The bonnet is of white milan straw and it is set off by black and white silk faille leaves of dramatic beauty. The leaves are combined with a graceful tendril that juts out from the left side of the crown.

Motion Picture Academy Awards Ready to be Given

Hollywood, March 23. (AP)— Oscar, still a little pale from last year's near demise, will make his 22nd appearance on schedule tonight.

Searchlights, stars, red carpets and all the conventional trappings of the annual motion picture academy awards have been assembled, yet the level of enthusiasm along movie row definitely is sub-standard.

For a time, while major studios withheld monetary support, it appeared that the yearly bestowal of honors might pass into history. But the producers finally came through with a financial shot in the arm for Oscar.

Up for best picture of 1949 are "All The King's Men" (Columbia), "Battleground" (MGM), "The Heiress" (Paramount), "A Letter to Three Wives" (20th-Fox) and "Twelve O'Clock High" (20th-Fox).

Best actress nominees are: Jeanne Crain ('Pinky'), Olivia Dehavilland ("The Heiress"), Susan Hayward ("My Foolish Heart"), Deborah Kerr ("Edward, My Son") and Loretta Young ("Come to the Stable").

Nominated for best actor are: Broderick Crawford ("All the King's Men"), Kirk Douglas ("Champion"), Gregory Peck ("Twelve O'Clock High"), Richard Todd ("The Hasty Heart") and John Wayne ("The Sands of Iwo Jima").

Academy officials are somewhat disturbed by the likelihood that 20 per cent of the nominees will be absent, on location or abroad, when the ceremonies start at 11 p.m. E.S.T. in the 2,800-seat RKO Pantages Theatre.

Awards presented tonight will be the result of balloting among some 2,000 Academy members. Nominations were made by vote among 10,950 workers in the industry. More than 25 professional categories and a long list of technical achievements are represented in the tally.

Nominees, guests and press will fill a large portion of the theatre. Remaining seats are available to the public—at $6 to $12 apiece.

STILL WAITING

Crayford, Kent, England (CP) — Kent county council has been asked to give earliest consideration to a proposal for widening Crawley Road. The scheme was first put forward in 1936.

GOOD MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

What form of name for divorcee?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Until several years ago I lived in a large city, but was transferred to this rather small city when my company opened a branch here. I married then and have always kept my position as general manager of this branch of our business. Recently I have applied for a divorce. The problem I'd like to bring to you concerns the correct form of my name after my divorce. I have always used my maiden name in my business life, and "Mrs. John Smith" socially. I loathe the form "Mrs. Dorothy Smith", but this is the form most of the divorcees use here. I don't want to seem "high hat" by using the form I know is correct . . . "Mrs. Robinson Smith" for example . . . but, on the other hand, for me to use "Mrs. Dorothy Smith", just to conform to the general custom here would be most distasteful to me. What to do, Mrs. Beeckman? Any possible alternative is correct?

Dorothy

If I were you, and feeling as you do, I'd forthrightly and correctly use "Mrs. Robinson Smith." Even if this form isn't the form generally used in your community, it's the correct form . . . it's a good social form, since it does not combine the first name with the title "Mrs." . . . it's a practical form, makes good sense because it at once indicates the status . . . and has dignity because it shows at once that the woman who has adopted that form of name knows what's what in correct name-form.

The only possible alternative that is "more or less correct" is to use the initial of your first name . . . . Mrs. D. Robinson Smith.

Wedding Boutonnieres

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

At a formal afternoon wedding, do all the men in the wedding party wear the same kind of boutonnieres, and also how about the fathers—bride's and groom's?

Bob S.

Customarily (and sentimentally) the groom wears a few small flowers, usually lilies-of-the-valley, from his bride's bouquet. The other men in the wedding party, best man and ushers, as well as the fathers, all wear white boutonnieres; sometimes the best man and fathers wear gardenias, and the ushers wear white carnations; and sometimes they all wear either gardenias or white carnations.

On girl's visiting-cards: "Miss" before name

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My daughter is to graduate from a junior college in the late Spring, and we would like to have her first personal cards engraved for her, to enclose with her commencement invitations and other occasions of graduation. I had taken it for granted that they should be engraved with "Miss" before her name . . . but she assures me that it is more "modern" to omit the title. What is the correct form?

Mother

Checked Topper

Navy and white coat

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

NAVY and white hound's tooth checked worsted is used for a youthful and useful spring coat. It is cut on straight and boxy lines, which makes it good for wear over a slim, tailored suit. A double set of patch pockets—a chest and hips—lend interest to the line. And for additional detail and fresh charm there is a starched white linen collar above the neat little fabric bib. The white linen cuffs and covered buttons can be detached for tubbing. The sleeves are set in and there is a side pleat in back.

It is definitely incorrect to omit the "Miss" before your daughter's name on such a formal item as visiting-cards. Her cards should read: Miss Mary Joan Clark. Visiting-cards are a gesture to formality, and as such they should be correctly "dressed" . . . with the title before the name, with no initials used in the name, perfectly engraved. Tell your daughter that she can achieve the "modern" touch correctly by choosing today's most popular engraving style, Shaded Antique Roman, the letters of which are tall and youthful and chic.

Meaning of "half-mourning"

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

To settle a discussion, will you please answer this question: Exactly what does the term "Half Mourning" mean?

The Group

Today the term "half mourning" (sometimes referred to as "second mourning") is, generally speaking, used to mean any combination of black and white, or white with . . . most often a white collar on a black dress, a black ribbon band on a white hat, white gloves with a black dress or suit. "Half mourning", also includes all shades of gray, very light to very dark, and purple, from mauve to purple . . . but today the wearing of gray or purple as mourning is seldom seen.

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am engaged to be married to a young man of 19. I am 17.

He has not worked for over six months, and every time I mention work to him, he says he is taking a vacation. My mother and sister say I am making a mistake, and that after we get married I will be very sorry. Would you please advise me what I should do?

D.

Dear D.:

I agree heartily with your mother and sister.

In the first place, while there have been many happy marriages in which the wife was considerably older than her husband, they are definitely the exception rather than the rule. Somehow I doubt if yours would prove one of these exceptions.

The fact that this young man seem to enjoy idleness is a poor recommendation for his character. What does he expect the two of you to live on if you should get married? The probability is that you would very soon find yourself supporting him if you were to become his wife.

My first advice would be that you give up any idea of marrying him. If you are reluctant to do that, however, the next most sensible thing would be to visit a good long time and give him a chance to show you conclusively what sort of person he is.

It's all a matter of manners

Dear Miss Fairfax:

When you meet your boy friend's mother, is it correct to say "How do you do, Mrs. So-and-So", or "Hello" or just "Hi"?

After you have been introduced, how would you go about making a conversation?

When you are about to leave, what would be the proper thing to say?

Geraldine

Dear Geraldine:

Whether she is your boy friend's mother or not, the only courteous thing to say to any older woman, when introduced to her, is "How do you do, Mrs. So-and-So?" To say either "Hello" or "Hi" would certainly give her a very poor opinion of your training in manners.

It is not likely that you would have to worry about making conversation after such an introduction. The other person usually takes the lead in such circumstances and the younger one follows her lead. It is not particularly courteous for a younger person to take the initiative and immediately start chattering.

The proper thing to say when you are leaving, after meeting someone for the first time is whatever seems natural at the moment. There is no special rule for such an occasion except that

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMIESON

Consider the ensemble

When selecting the items of her wardrobe, the smart woman makes plans so that these items will be congenial in color and appearance. She sees herself as a complete composition, not just piecemeal. How does the hat look? Is the frock correct? What costume jewelry should she buy? One wrong note and all is lost.

The ensemble movement is not to be construed as applicable to dress alone. The woman who starts a campaign of reducing exercises, pays heed to her diet of limited calories, is thinking in terms of figure-proportions and lines, the ensemble which is her body. Fat legs and narmal torso, or heavy torso and thin legs do not firm a respectable composition. When the shoulders are narrow and the hips like the spreading chestnut tree, when the waistline gradually does a disappearing act, the figure losses uniformity. For that reason thousands of women are making an active attempt to put themselves in form. More glory to them!

As to color ensembles, note the smart frocks that have been produced by expert designers.

One can get toiletries that all carry the same scent one to the other, if one is to be a lady of fashion, attractive of appearance.

Cassar ' hodgepodge color schemes will turn the prettiest girl into a frump.— A keen appreciation of color and line is the secret of good dressing. Without them one cannot expect to make the good-looks grade. It is a grand satisfaction to feel that one looks right. To look right does not mean that one must spend a great deal of money. Perfect taste is the answer. . . .

Cosmeticians have joined up with the ensemble addicts. Powders, rouge and lipstick come in many shades and tones; by careful choosing the shopper can find harmony between them and her complexion. She may need professional advice, or, if she uses her head, a mirror and a strong light, she may be able to work out the perfect formula, one that will glamorize her skin, bring out the sparkle of her eyes.

In the matter of perfume one must necessarily follow the idea of the ensemble. Creams of one scene may conflict with the scent of the powder you use. It is possible to get toiletries that all carry the same aroma. Bath salts, toilet water and perfume are combined in single boxes, so one will not err along these beauty lines. The idea of concord is particularly essential in bath garnetics. Two delicate perfumes can destroy each other or produce a mongrel odor.that is anything but satisfactory.

EVERY MOTHER WITH A BABY UNDER ONE YEAR OF AGE SHOULD READ THIS

Babies, with their immature digestive systems, often suffer from colic and gas pains because they cannot completely digest their food. In preparing foods for your baby, Libby's alone, of all baby food processors, take an important extra step—after straining baby foods, Libby's homogenize them.

HOMOGENIZATION breaks up Libby's Baby Foods so THEY ARE TEN TIMES FINER IN TEXTURE THAN FOODS WHICH ARE ONLY STRAINED. Coarse food particles are pulverized, and even the food cells themselves are broken open. This has two important effects which are of particular importance to you and your baby.

First and most important, it makes Libby's Baby Foods so easy to digest that they are well tolerated even by six-weeks-old infants. This is only true of Libby's Baby Foods. Secondly, because all the food is digested, it means that with Libby's, baby gets more actual nourishment from an equal amount of food. Both these facts have been proven in clinical and laboratory tests.

So choose carefully for your baby . . . chooses the foods with the ADDED BENEFITS of homogenization. That can only mean one brand of baby foods—LIBBY'S!

Whitehall Notebook:

Canadian Member of British Parliament Praises Empire

By ALAN HARVEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 23 — (CP) — It was a long, hard haul to the House of Commons, but E. H. C. (Ted) Leather of Hamilton, finally made it — by 903 votes.

After a strenuous campaign three speeches a night and five on Saturdays — the six-foot, sandy-haired Canadian just scraped home as Conservative candidate in Somerset North, one of Britain's largest constituencies. He started his campaign more than three years ago.

In the Feb. 23 election he polled 23,353 votes compared with 22,050 for his Labor opponent, Mrs. K. Field, and 5,573 for A. E. Whitcher, Liberal.

Mr. Leather didn't wait long to go into action. The new parliament was just three days old when he rose to make his maiden speech on a favorite theme — the British Empire.

Bleak Letters

"I was born in a free, independent nation that is still proud to call itself a member of the British Empire," said Leather, who served as a captain in the Toronto Scottish Regiment during the war.

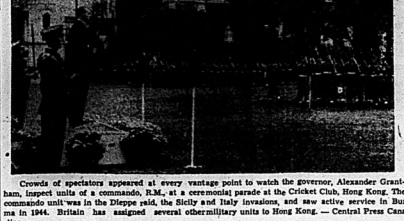
Pointing at a handful of notes, he added: "I write that in block capitals — British Empire, not Commonwealth."

Leather, unsuccessful in British South in the 1945 election, roused one of the biggest cheers at the 1948 Conservative conference in Llandudno, Wales, when he said: "I went to him the Empire means staying alive."

"If it succeeds I stay alive," he said. "If not I shall get out my tin hat and go out again into the mud of Europe."

In his parliamentary debut, he said Britain must place greater reliance on her own strength and vigor than on paper treaties.

"That strength can be based only on a strong foreign policy, and a strong foreign policy must be based on the British Empire."



Canada Slighted

Leather said the Labor government had treated Commonwealth countries "shamefully" in the last five years. The president of the Board of Trade, Harold Wilson, had denied this.

"He denied it in Canada with some very interesting and technical arguments," the new Conservative member told the House. "But he knows the people of Canada think it is true. It is the old story of where there is smoke there must be somebody smoking."

Leather intends to combine his new parliamentary duties with his insurance business here. He lives in an eight-storey Sydney London home near the Houses of Parliament with his wife, the former Sheila Greenless of Hamilton, and their five-year-old daughter, Hope.

HONG KONG DISPLAYS ITS DEFENSIVE STRENGTH

Crowds of spectators appeared at every vantage point to watch the governor, Alexander Grantham, inspect units of a commando, R.M., at a ceremonial parade at the Cricket Club, Hong Kong. The commando unit was in the Dieppe raid, the Sicily and Italy invasions, and saw active service in Burma in 1944. Britain has assigned several other military units to Hong Kong. — Central Press Canadian.

Dude College

By Oren Arnold

He was with Mr. Bailey when men from the two planes walked to his point and greeted him Dressed in business clothes, they were duly introduced. Mr. Bailey was affable as usual but the six guests there were not very talkative, about understood this situation.

"It's a pleasure to have met you gentlemen," he declared presently rising. "Mr. Bailey said he was expecting business callers and I was about to leave anyway. I'd glad you had a smooth trip."

"Ho, Andre, don't rush off! Fact is, I wanted you to know these fellows, and what them on know you. Mr. Girardeau, here is a French refugee. Wounded last March, captured, and escaped before France had to capitulate. But he hasn't surrendered—ha!"

"Yes, sir, gentlemen," he went on, "America has got to recognize international conditions no matter how determined we are to stay out of war. Preparedness is a necessity. And we have something now that will bolster that preparedness to a very great extent. These men, Andre, have come to conduct extensive bombing tests out here on the desert, although I believe any public announcement of that fact should come from Colonel McDavid here, eh?"

The man called Colonel McDavid answered.

"Right Mr. Bailey. Of course, bombing practice can't be hidden uder a hat; but we do have our secrets, and we do have our enemies trying to get them. Are you a flyer Mr. Girardeau?"

"No," Mr. Bailey answered for him, and what Mr. Bailey added was enough to startle Andre 'almost out of his cheerful poise. "No Colonel, Andre doesn't fly. But the young fellow has, I think, conquered my daughter; and she approves of a man, he's solid. I have to recognize that. In addition, Andre is a gentleman of some means. So I had been planning to work him in as an investor and executive in the Bailey corporation itself!"

Andre held his breath, while Mr. Bailey moved to put an affectionate paternal arm around his shoulders.

Rainbow Canyon was aptly named; its strata of reds and yellows and blues, and browns carved out for miles like gigantic ribbons. Also it was far off the usual paths used by dude riders. Silting high in the ancient cliff dwelling there, Wesley York drew Ronica a map on his note pad.

"Now here is Pueblo and the University," said he pointing with his pencil, "and this line is the approximate route we took in riding out. Here is the upper end of the canyon. It is not far above this cliff house. But the lower end extends on down across the international line about there, into Mexico itself."

"I see," said Ronnie.

"Rainfall is negligible here. Four, five inches a year at most. No irrigation possibilities. Hence there are not even any ranches in this area, no people at all. Very few have ever seen the canyon, even."

"Then what in the world is Lona Montoya doing out here?" Ronica asked, turning to look at Wesley.

The young professor licked his lips and showed just a ghost of a smile.

"I don't know. But I imagine she might ask us the same question."

"We have a logical reason," Ronnie insisted. "And I didn't come alone, I came with an escort. I wouldn't have ridden away out here alone. Lona had a sprained ankle just a few days ago too."

"That's so, I'll admit it is peculiar."

He took up his binoculars again studied the distant rider with interest.

"These glasses are powerful," said he. "I can see her very well. She appears to have saddle bags loaded so probably she is ready for any chance trouble. I mean, she doubtless has water and food and grub."

"Is your pistol in your shoulder pack, Wes?"

"Yes."

"Then we could shoot and make her see us, maybe."

"The sound and echoes might carry down the canyon, although I doubt it. Anyway, it would seem that the girl wants solitude. Perhaps she is, uh, distracted mentally; seeking repose."

Ronica considered that. "I don't think—no."

"Why?"

"I don't know, just a hunch. She's not the type for it."

"I confess that we of the faculty have found her a little, uh, difficult to classify. She is a fair student. But there is an air of mystery about her. Intensified now, in my mind."

"She's awfully pretty," Ronnie said. "Attractive to men."

"Yes."

"You like her, don't you, Wes? I could tell you did that night at the dance. And—she talked to me on the campus later."

"Talked to you about—me?"

Ronica smiled, staring off down the canyon. "You'd be surprised, Wes!"

"Oh!"

"She was quite angry because I took you away that night, Remember? But you really did have the date with me, and—I didn't like being sloed up any more than she did, so—"

"Please, Ronica, all that was most embarrassing. I regret all of it. Things were—mixed up!"

"I'll say! But what about now? Here we are, and there she is. Won't she see our horses, maybe?"

"No, I tied them in shade on the floor of the canyon; you can see them from here, but she could never discover them. Remember, we are nearly 700 feet above them and her. And anyway—look Ronnie, she is not alone, after all!"

Ronica took the glasses then. She stared out intently telling what she saw in little half-whispered tones as if afraid Lona might hear.

"Sure enough . . . Wes . . there is a man!" She tightened the focus a bit. "Wes, it really is a man, but he is not on a horse."

"No, I saw that."

"Strange! Who is it, I wonder?"

"Possibly it is none of our—of ours."

"None of our business," she supplied. "But I'm too human to let that interfere, Wes! You're the one who must be dignified."

"Quite so."

"Stop saying that, I told you! You're a swell egg, really."

Her manner pleased him. Swell egg. It is good to have a pretty girl tell you you are a swell egg. It means more than a citation from the dean of the college.

"In a way," said he, "it is my business, too. For I am a faculty member, on second thought. And she a student."

"I want to know what's going on."

"Uh—so do I!"

"I can't identify the man, Wes. You try."

He took the binoculars back and used them. "It is no man I know."

"You don't suppose she is in danger? Does she see the man?"

"She must. In fact I think she has hailed him. . . Yes . . What in the world would a man be out here for afoot? Of course he may have a horse tied somewhere. But—"

"He just seemed to appear out of the side of the dome, Wes. From that rocky west wall of the canyon. Of course, there are boulders and scrubby trees and things He could have been hiking up."

He watched for 10 minutes more, Wes using the glasses, Ronnie could see them only as tiny moving dots away off, but to Wes their motions were distinct even in detail.

"My curiosity is giving me the tingles," said Ronnie. "And a queer way—have you noticed that it's late? The sun is already out of sight behind the west wall, and we have quite a ride back to Pueblo."

"That's true, but — don't be afraid." He seemed more intent than ever.

"I am never afraid. I just mentioned it . . . Can you see them now?"

"No. No, Ronnie, I can't! You said the man just seemed to appear out of the mountain side, Well, by George, the mountain has swallowed both of them again!"

"Hunh!"

He lowered his binoculars to stare at her. "She rode to a patch of natural rock enclosure, dismounted near the man, and together they just walked to the side of the rock hill!"

Colonel McDavid, a brusque but friendly enough man of almost 60 years, was explaining things to Andre Girardeau. He had accepted Thomas Bailey's announcement that Andre was soon to be in the family both personally and financially.

"Terrific waste and inefficiency has been the concern of us all in studying bombing planes, Mr. Girardeau," the colonel was saying, "Now take this ship itself— It is as fine a craft as ever entered the skies,—an extremely powerful motor, maneuverability that is a dream to any pilot, long range fuel supply, all the best of modern invention in both aviation and military fields. Notice the gun mountings even the new type armor, light but effective Only thing lacking is a dependable method of aiming and dropping explosives. And that, sir, is precisely what we have now developed."

"Excellent!" Andre nodded.

"Step into the ship with me, please," the colonel invited When they were inside the big army plane Colonel McDavid pointed at once to the bombing controls. "See this? See this odd-looking device?"

HOPPING MAD? NO, JUST HOPPING

Move Graveyard, Village Section To Higher Land

St. George, Man., March 23 — (CP) — They're even going to dig up the graveyard to make way for the wheels of progress in this erstwhile-slumberous village of 550.

Some 95 miles northeast of Winnipeg on the banks of the Winnipeg River, St. George is smack in the middle of the $20,000,000 Pine Falls power project.

When completed in 1952 a dam will spread water over the north and south banks of the river, where trim farm buildings, a school and the parish cemetery now nestle.

Paper work is due to start soon on the task of picking up the lower section of the village and moving it to higher land. Some buildings can be salvaged, but many will be torn down.

The town's largest structure — the Roman Catholic church — will remain untouched.

The feeling of the villagers is still somewhat mixed. At first there was consternation at the thought of moving the cemetery, but now it is accepted as inevitable.

The district, officially classed as "unorganized" on the province's books, was settled by three families in 1883. Later John Bracken, former Manitoba premier, built a farm there.

It's chief distinction is a small pen-raising industry. The products are sold mostly to Montreal for pea soup. The industry will be obliterated.

USE IODINE SPARINGLY

London, March 23—(Reuters)—Britons are to take their salt with a pinch of iodine—to help prevent goitre and thyroid gland diseases. Food Minister Maurice Webb announced Wednesday all table and cooking salt will be iodized, following a recommendation by the Medical Research Council.

GIRL ELECTROCUTED

Orlando, Fla., March 23—(AP) —A six-year-old girl was electrocuted trying to save her puppy from a grounded power line Wednesday and her mother died trying to save her. Deputy Sheriff J. J. Mitchell said an investigation is being made of how two 4,800 volt wires came to be on the ground. The puppy touched one of the wires first, Mitchell said. Little Isabel Yorton tried to help the dog, and then Mrs. Edna Yorton, 56, went to her daughter's aid.

EXPLOSIVE DISCOVERY

In 1862 Alfred Nobel, a Swedish scientist, invented a method by which nitroglycerine could be used for commercial dynamiting.

Honey The Oldest Sweet

Honey was one of man's first foods. At one time it was considered a priceless treat, used only at celebrations of greatest importance.

The habits of the bee are the same today as a thousand years ago but man has improved the method of gathering and marketing honey. He has, however, not been able to duplicate it. The flavors of honey due to the aromatic substances found in the nectar of flowers and therefore honey varies from time to time. Since taste preferences vary one flavor may be more pleasing to the residents of one locality than that produced in another section of the country. Honey producers frequently blend several honeys to obtain a uniform color and a flavor that is generally appealing.

Grades of Honey

When honey is graded, the grade mark along with the color classification must be shown on the container. It is wise to look for these markings and buy by grade.

No. 1—Good flavor, free from foreign material and has good keeping qualities—best grade for table use.

No. 2—May have traces of pollen or wax. The keeping quality is not necessarily as good as No. 1 but the honey is of good flavor.

No. 3—May not be of such good flavor and may show some pollen or wax particles. May have poorer keeping qualities than higher grades.

"Pasteurized" honey has been treated by the controlled application of heat to a point where all yeasts responsible for fermentation are destroyed. For this reason, it will keep indefinitely. It is packed in plants registered with and operating under the supervision of the Federal Department of Agricultural. Unless declared "liquid" pasteurized honey will be crystallized and of a uniform, fine texture. Pasteurized honey is labelled as such.

Absorbs Moisture

Honey, as purchased, is practically imperishable if stored properly. In the home, it is best to keep it in a warm dry place (75 degrees or over). However, low temperatures or even freezing does not injure the color or flavor but does hasten granulation; therefore, the refrigerator is a poor storage place if the liquid form is desired. Honey will if stored in a damp place, absorb moisture and may ferment.

Extracted honey crystallizes readily and very quickly becomes solid or nearly so. It is generally sold in this form though the liquid may also be found, if preferred. Solid honey is easily liquified by warming it in a double boiler or placing the container in a pan of warm water. In either case the water should not be hot, as too intense heating spoils the flavor and appearance of honey.

Has Many Uses

Solid honey may be used in many ways: As a spread for bread, toast and biscuits. Delicious combination spreads for sandwiches may also be made of honey and peanut butter, honey and cheese or chopped nuts and dried fruit mixed with the honey.

For cake icings and fillings, combine granulated honey with nuts, coconut, ground fruit or grated chocolate.

For hard sauce, cream solid honey with butter. As a topping for gingerbread and steamed puddings this sauce is unexcelled.

Liquid honey is ideal for many uses such as: Sweetening fruit. Drizzled over grapefruit, strawberries, peaches or fruit salads, it quickly dissolves and blends with the other flavors.

As a spread it is delicious when served with hot biscuits, muffins or toast.

For ice cream sundaes—drizzle honey over ice cream and add nuts or fruit.

A greased cup or spoon is most satisfactory for measuring as it prevents the honey from sticking and thus none is wasted. Liquid honey is usually more convenient to measure and mix but the granulated form gives equally good results.

Honey Icing

1½ cup honey
2 egg whites (stiffly beaten)
pinch of salt

Heat the honey to a rolling boil and continue boiling for one minute (238 degrees F., the honey will thin somewhat but care must be taken to prevent it from scorching. Pour slowly in a thin stream into the egg whites, beat continuously until the mixture is fluffy and will hold its shape. Add flavoring if desired. This mixture may be used as a topping for desserts or as an icing for cakes. Yield: sufficient for one nine-inch cake.

BABY'S little "Tummy" is often sadly upset. It is easy enough to do, if you know just how to do it. Just Mrs. M. S. Indians Work 500 Feet in Air Hammering Rivets

Wilmington, Del., March 23—(AP)— A band of Quebec Indians gathered on the bank of the Delaware River today wearing plastic helmets in place of their tribal headdress.

The "braves" they carried were rivet hammers.

The Indians, mostly from the Caughnawaga reservation near Montreal, are veteran "high steel men" employed by the American Bridge Company to work on the huge span to be erected across the river from a point south of Wilmington to New Jersey.

Fred Montour, one of the first to arrive, related that Caughnawagas have been building bridges since 1886, when their skill was discovered during the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway bridge over the St. Lawrence.

Montour, 27, has been working as a bridge riveter for 10 years. He says that, while Indians can walk a girder 500 feet in the air with the same ease the average person feels on a city sidewalk, safety is still the watchword with the "high steel" men.

He wears a pair of rubber soled shoes. A plastic helmet offers protection from falling rivets.

The rivet crew is made up of four men—a heater, a "beater," a "dicker-in" and a "bucker-up." Crews usually have worked together for a long time and move from one job to another as a team.

Like many of the Caughnawaga Montour travels with his family, setting up housekeeping in each job. Between jobs, they return to the reservation on the banks of the St. Lawrence.

Teen-Age Boys, Girls Arrive in Britain

London, March 23 — (Reuters) — Teen-age boys and girls from all over the world have come to Britain for a 1950 youth forum, opening in Birmingham today.

Canadians are among the delegates, all between 16 and 19, who won the trip to Britain in an essay competition sponsored by the United Nations Association, writing on the subject they will discuss at rallies throughout Britain "my country and world peace."

For nine weeks they will live with British families and attend British schools.

Besides Canada, delegates came from the United States, Jamaica, Australia, South Africa and many European countries.

U.S. Embarking On Huge Building Plan in Alaska

Washington, March 23 (AP)— The United States military forces are embarking upon a huge building program at bases outside the continental limits of the U.S., especially in Alaska.

They propose to spend on these bases about $239,409,000 of the $665,000,000 they are asking Congress to authorize for military public works.

The idea is to safeguard the U.S. from a sudden "sneak punch," possibly with atomic weapons.

The announced bases that will be strengthened range from Alaska to Okinawa, Hawaii, Kwajalein and Johnston Island in the Pacific to Bermuda in the Atlantic, up to Labrador, over to the Azores, Libia and Saudi-Arabia.

Alaska apparently is to be made into a bristling air defence fortress. A total of nearly $171,861,000 is to be poured into that frontier region alone.

The air force proposes to spend about $45,627,000 for such items as units of the radar "fence" long-range weather stations and highly secret "interceptor stations" capable of eavesdropping on messages 1,000 to 2,000 miles away.

The army has requested $74,224,000 for airfields, roads and trails that will defend these installations and air fields. Both services request funds to build storage facilities, some of them in secret, largely underground, to keep gasoline and jet fuels.

The navy is seeking $23,316,000 for a secret base outside the U.S. no details have been released, even a hint as to the location or purpose.

Other funds asked for $3,193,000 to set up a permanent communication facility at Argentia, Nfld., for the air force and $3,050,000 for aviation gasoline storage and high speed refuelling facilities at Goose Bay airport, Labrador.

1000 Professors Opposed to Reds Joining Faculty

Berkeley, Calif., March 23 — More than 1,000 professors at all 9 of California professors have voted against employment of any communist on the faculty.

At the same time, they overwhelmingly approved a resolution non-communist oath ordered by the State Board of Regents on a basis of sign by April 30 or quit.

The controversy has drawn reactions from campuses throughout the United States but it now may be headed for settlement.

Regent Edwin W. Pauley, Edward A. Dickson, said the vote is the first time that the faculty of any great university in the nation has gone formally on record as supporting a policy of outlawing subversive teachers and influences."

The one-sided vote was taken in secret small hours after the two resolutions aimed at countering imposition of the special oath.

HOME AFTER THREE YEARS IN ANTARCTIC

After three years among the desolate wastes of the Antarctic, three members of the British scientific expedition to the Falkland Islands dependencies relief ship was unable to break through the stiff pack-ice which surrounded their advance base on Stonington Island in Marguerite Bay. Rescue had to be achieved by air, and Norseman aircraft brought them to safety. Now, their great adventure over, they are in London. Although marooned, the British party had ample food and fuel stocks. Left to right: Terence Mark Rasdall, Bernard Stonehouse and Harold Jones. — Central Press Canadian.

Ontario Veteran Forges Success from Wheelchair

Kitchener, Ont., Mar. 23 (CP)— Clare Millar has come a long way since his discharge as a paraplegic from Lyndhurst Lodge treatment centre in Toronto.

He wasn't sure then, in 1946, that he would ever get a chance at waging a travel and ticket agency and writing a newspaper column, he no longer wonders.

The 31-year-old native of Cobourg, Ont., appears to be a thriving success in Kitchener's business life.

Determination has developed a few ideas into a sound living since Clare was discharged from hospital. A wartime spinal injury has left him paralyzed from the waist down. He is in continual need of aid from crutches and a wheelchair.

He says he got the idea of a ticket agency in hospital in 1945 when numerous Kitchener friends asked him to get tickets for Toronto functions.

Beginning operations at home, enthusiastic response to newspaper advertisements led him to set up a downtown office. He got his first break the first day—a contract to sell tickets for a symphony orchestra concert in Kitchener.

"I sold over 3,000 tickets to that one concert," he says. "And I jumped at the chance to place printed publicity advertising the service in every envelope along with the tickets." From that point on it was smooth sailing.

Soon a travel column written by him began appearing in the Kitchener Record telling of present and coming events in Kitchener and Waterloo.

Then Trans-Canada Air Lines appointed him their official agent in Kitchener. He added other air lines, until today he represents more than 30 in many parts of the world. He has also taken on the agency for a bus line.

He handles travel arrangements for several industries in the area, including hotel reservations, and represents an American travel chain. In all his work he is assisted by 12 employees.

Occasionally he combines business with pleasure and goes off with his wife to such places as Florida, Jamaica and the West Indies.

Before the Second World War Clare was an amateur boxer on a tire company. He married his wife, Betty, in 1942 before his enlistment in the Highland Light Infantry. A sniper's bullet got him and a series of hospital stays began in Belgium, took him to England and finally home.

He still suffers periodic excruciating pain. But that doesn't affect his activities. In addition to his business, he finds time for Kiwanis Club and Chamber of Commerce meetings. He's treasurer of the Kiwanis safety campaign.

Mouse Joins Litter of Kittens, Is Happy, Then Dies of Broken Heart

Jersey City, N.J., March 23— (AP) — A shy mouse who thought he was a kitten died Wednesday of the rodent equivalent of a broken heart.

There wasn't any official autopsy, but those who knew him said they were certain he must have died of grief when he learned that he was, well, just a mouse.

He had sauntered up Monday to a cardboard box in a corner of an express company shed and plunked himself down among the new litter of three kittens owned by Minnie, a cat with a fearsome reputation as a mouser.

But motherhood must have changed Minnie.

Minnie just looked, then lolled on her side, and let the newcomer in. He joined quickly in the family routine, frolicked with the rest of the brood, cuddled up beside Minnie for his midday nap and came to believe — well, that he was just another kitten.

But someone in the shed called the newspapers. They sent reporters and photographers who peered inquisitively at their find—a mouse in the family for hour after hour.

At first the mouse leaped happily about the box, jutting his whiskers forward to put his best profile within camera range. Everybody looked at him, and he looked at everybody, nolzes at him and made him think he was just the prettiest little one in the brood.

But the continued attention the second day got him slightly worried. Those who knew him said he moved in a worried way next to Minnie.

Wednesday morning he was found dead. His friends who knew him said he must have been afraid to pose in some cameraman's lens and found out — well, that he was just a mouse."

BATTLE OF WORDS IN U.S. SENATE

DR. PHILIP JESSUP

SENATOR McCARTHY

Senator McCarthy's charges of Communist sympathies held by major and minor executives in government employ have caused many outbursts of dissension in U.S. Congress. Most prominent among McCarthy's targets is Dr. Philip C. Jessup, U.S. ambassador at large, who flew back from a trip to the Far East to reply to the allegation that he had an "affinity" for Communist causes. He counter-charged that McCarthy had a "shocking disregard for the interests of the country" and called the senator's remarks "false and utterly irresponsible." Central Press Canadian.

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKED

Winnipeg — (CP) — A snatch-and-grab thief believes in taking his opportunities. After taking $66 from a restaurant till he was over-hauled on the street by a pursuer. In the scuffle he picked the man's pocket of $35 and ran off into the night.

CINDERS DAMAGE STORES

Edmonton — (CP) — Edmonton merchants want the city to stop putting cinders on icy downtown streets. Store owners told the chamber of commerce that "black, inky dust" tarried on the feet of customers had caused heavy damage to carpets and rugs

Radio Station Starts Campaign For Quadruplets

Toronto, March 23 — (CP) — A suggestion that a fund to help Sault Ste. Marie's Hargreaves quadruplets be set up here under city auspices was made today by David Balfour and Allan Lamport members of the Toronto Board of Control.

Controller Lamport said a Toronto newspaper today quotes the Sault's Mayor Herbert Small as announcing that civic officials in Sault Ste. Marie will do nothing further for Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Hargreaves, who are reported considering offering their 2 1-2-month-old babies for adoption because they are financially unable to provide for them.

Mayor Smale's announcement was "callous," Controller Lamport told reporters.

"If there ever was a chance for Toronto to help, it's in this case," he said. "We should ask Toronto civicrews to institute a campaign for the quads and the city could give its blessing and do anything we can to help."

Asked to Sponsor Fund

Controller Balfour said he and Controller Lamport will ask the Board of Control to sponsor the fund, with city hall employees working on the administration work.

"It's really up to the provincial government to help this family, but since they can't get help, I'll ask Toronto to do it," he said.

The newspaper story to which Controller Lamport referred quoted a mayor Small as saying that the Sault had given the family a building lot worth $1,500 and adding:

"I wasn't the mayor of this city when the Hargreaves quads were promised a home and, so far as I am concerned and I am sure the majority of the members of the city council, this city will do nothing more."

Meantime, a radio station (CHML) in Hamilton has completed a campaign to provide clothing for the quadruplets.

A Toronto radio Station (CKEY) started a drive to raise funds to furnish the quads.

Listeners have already donated nearly $1,000. Bob Hall, disc jockey at the station, described enthusiasm shown for the campaign as terrific.

A Toronto man whose own large family is grown-up has also offered to adopt the babies. The quads' father, C. O. (Osie) Hargreaves, said a few days ago that, due to financial difficulties, he and his wife might have to put the months-old children for adoption.

Hoodlum Gangs Defy Police, Wage Quarrel With Citizens, Battle Rival Vancouver Gangs

Vancouver, March 23 (CP) — Hoodlum gangs, heedless of police and a wave of public indignation, are continuing their inexplicable quarrel with citizens, the law and juvenile factions.

Destructive sorties of the snot-nulled youths began five months ago with the near-fatal stabbing of a youngster. An apparent climax was reached Wednesday night. Police blamed teen-agers for a fire that destroyed a large storage barn.

The gang members, armed with spring-knives—known as "shivs"—brass-knuckles and lead-weighted fog rings, roam in organized groups, destruction apparently their sole aim.

Free-for-All Battle

Last week at a teen-age dance, rival gangs from several districts started a free-for-all outside the hall. In the presence of eight police prowler cars, numerous pistol-whipless men and a paddy wagon.

Police, probation officers and youth workers attended the affair at eight to 12 organized gangs in the city.

Members of a suburban Burnaby gang claim they can raise a fighting force 100-strong.

Police Chief Walter Mulligan last week organized a four-man "youth guidance detail" to smash the gangs.

Many reasons are given for the outbreak of brutality and vandalism. Some of the factors include kicking a rival in the face with heavy boots until he is unconscious.

Hubert S. Banner, vice-president of the Vancouver Youth Association, said today he blames public apathy and the lack of parents' interest in the activities of their children.

Another youth said he believes hoodlumism is being fomented by "some organization trying to undermine Canadian law and order."

Police say they will first ferret out the gang leaders and then attempt to give protection to a straight-and-narrow path.

Many advocate the tried-and-true "strap" treatment.

Kilbon Acquitted In Mercy Killing Case at Cobourg

Cobourg, March 23 — (CP) — Ralph Kilbon is a free man today, acquitted of a charge of murder in the mercy slaying of his mentally-ill wife in their rambling, 18-room home near here.

The quiet-spoken, retired engineer, who had calmly admitted to police that he "finished" his 54-year-old wife to end her suffering, was acquitted yesterday of murder. An Ontario supreme court jury returned the verdict after 65 minutes' deliberation.

He sobbed in a grey suit, the 56-year-old gentleman farmer told reporters: "I was not surprised at the verdict. I feel that what I did was a public act."

He was immediately set free and said he would eventually go to the Kilbon homestead where his wife, Irene, died Nov. 1st, after she attempted to commit suicide by shooting herself in the stomach.

At the two-day trial, Kilbon admitted he fired a shot into his wife's temple, which only found her slumped on the floor in their bathroom at Colborne, Ont., 10 miles northwest of this Eastern Ontario town.

He summoned police and told them: "I do not consider that I committed murder."

Defence Counsel J. J. Robinette told the jury of eight farmers, a businessman and another two laborers that "what this man did he considered was a real kindness from his worried state."

Mr. Robinette said the Crown failed to prove that Kilbon's shot caused his wife's death and there was repeated evidence that the wound Mrs. Kilbon inflicted on herself was a mortal one.

Had Incurable Disease

She suffered from Huntington's Corea, an incurable disease which caused mental deterioration and created tendencies toward suicide.

At the trial, Kilbon said his wife shot herself while he was outside getting a pail of water—shortly before she was to have gone to Whitby mental hospital. She was not going to return to the home after a visit to Whitby.

Medical witnesses for both Crown and defence said both wounds were self-inflicted, to cause almost immediate death.

Chief Witness Robinette: "When Kilbon fired the second shot Irene Kilbon was dead; legally, medically, even from the standpoint of common sense."

Critical of Witness

In his charge to the jury, Mr. Justice Dalton Wells was critical of the expert testimony given by Dr. Harold Gold of Whitby, a 32-year-old pathologist. A Crown witness, Dr. Gold testified Mrs. Kilbon could have lived for as much as an hour after she shot herself.

Dr. Gold would not have been "so dogmatic or positive" if he had more experience, he said.

"Although he had performed 500 autopsies, he is still learning. He has often looked at corpses. He has not dealt with the living."

Kilbon said he plans to go to New York with a brother for a rest and then return to his farm.

"I am going to try to pick up where I left off. I don't know how successful it will be."

Hungerford Twp. Farmers Organize Federation of Agriculture Unit

Tweed— (Special.)—An organization meeting for Township Units of the Hastings Federation of Agriculture was held in the Hungerford Township Hall on Wednesday afternoon. Mr. B. J. Hunt acted as chairman with Mr. Mike Collins, secretary. Mr. Cecil Belyea, fieldman for the Dominion Federation of Agriculture was the guest speaker and said that farmers were the most important people in Canada today, and they must carry on as they have been doing.

They can't expect to improve, though, by doing nothing, so the first thing, he said, they should do was organize strongly if they think they are right. He said that every farmer should be a member of a farm movement and must know exactly what is being done. The farmers have made tremendous strides since organizing 17 years ago.

Mr. Belyea said that the farmers were going to get floor prices as they just get enough now to keep them on the farms. He thought the government may be criticized this year on account of prices of eggs and other farm products. Agriculture has a right to be treated liberally. Farmers will wait and see what comes.

Cites Egg Producers

The speaker stated that something else had come about during the past year. Egg producers met and formed a producing agency for eggs. All eggs would then go through one agency which would mean real protection of control over production. Nothing had been done before about supply. Now periodical increases goes on market in level supply and can be disposed of in different ways so as not to effect market too much.

Some things have to be ironed out but most people are in favor of it.

He said that 450,000 farmers are behind the Federation and are a very enthusiastic behind the movement, reason for forming the Federation was to keep in touch with the farmer.

Mr. Ronald Longwell, Foxboro, explained the financing of the organization saying that the Federation was financing a booklet giving all the information of the handling of the finances.

Says Vaccination Needed

Mr. A. O. Dalrymple, Agricultural Representative, Stirling, explained the great need of a calf-hood vaccination program which is being sponsored by the county federation. He said that germs are easily spread in different ways through dogs, pigeons and many other different ways. Vaccination was the only way to get rid of infectious before they take place.

Wants Action Taken

Francis Tummon of Foxboro, said that farmers should realize the need of vaccinating and he would like to see a program be set up in this section and a number of directors appointed. He asked the farmers present if they were in favor of organizing the Federation in this township with the result a resolution was passed that we form a federation and canvass all farmers with regards to vaccination of young cattle".

Following is a list of farmers named to form a provisional board: Don Martin, Dewey Kleinsteiber, Mike Collins, Fred Rashotte, Wm. Woods, Harold Varty, Dennis Fleming, Dave Turkington, B. J. Hunt.

Mr. Hunt was appointed chairman, Mr. Collins, secretary.

Indians Formed First Successful And Still Existing League of Peace

Toronto, March 23 — (CP) — Magistrate O. M. Martin says history books give a false picture in representing Canadian Indians as cruel savages.

The York county magistrate, a full-blooded Mohawk born on the Six Nations Reservation near Brantford, last night told the annual meeting of the Municipal Chapter of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire:

"If the growing children of our Canadian schools could be taught the true history of Canada's Indians, our Indians would not long be left to live out of this world."

All warfare is cruel, he said. Whatever Indian warriors' practices may have been in the early days, "they cannot compare with the practices of civilized nations in warfare."

Although the history books depict the Indians as a warlike race, they formed "the first successful and lasting league for peace which the world has yet seen" when they set up the Iroquois Confederacy, he said. That league, with a sixth tribe added, still functions harmoniously as the Six Nations.

INVOKE CRIMES

The proclamation declared there was a state of serious industrial disturbance prejudicing or threatening trade and commerce with other countries and among the state of Australia.

Menzies told a tense House: "We will deal with Communists here once and for all. We will carry the fight to the Communists."

If the Communists decided to fight the Australian people, he said, the Australian people would fight back and make it clear they "will not tolerate lawlessness and violent attack on the normal processes of peaceful trade and commerce."

Menzies said legislation would be introduced soon to deal with the Communists but in the meantime the government proposes to use existing powers under the proclamation.

Australia's Crimes Act, amended in 1941, gives the federal government powers to meet almost everything from treason, sabotage, attempted revolution and offences against public offices or the administration of justice. Penalties, according to different sections of the Act, range from death for treason to imprisonment.

Menzies in election campaign last December pledged himself to ban the Communist party in Australia.

Mysore Revives Elephant Hunt, 40 Animals Bagged

Bombay —(Reuters)— Mysore state in southern India has revived elephant-hunting, favorite sport of ancient oriental monarchs.

In one "operation elephant" act concluded in the jungles near Nagalore, the Mysore forest department bagged 40 wild elephants.

The hunt, covering a forest area of about 200 square miles, was organized by a band of about 500 herdsmen, with the assistance of forest officials and trained shouts.

The Maharaja of Mysore, a number of Indian statesmen and many overseas visitors, watched the hunt.

After a period of taming by skilled mahouts and trained elephants, the newly captured animals will either work in the jungle dragging teak-wood, or parade the city streets, carrying bejewelled idols at temple festivities. The luckiest among the captured elephants may go abroad as India's gift to foreign zoos.

Elephant-hunting as a royal sport has gone out of fashion in India in the last 200 years, as modern princes fancied horse-racing and tiger-shooting in preference to the ultimate ceremonial of the elephant hunt.

In Mysore, Travancore and the Assam states, elephants are considered to be government property and it is forbidden to shoot them. Mysore held its first elephant hunt in recent times in 1891, to entertain the Grand Duke of Sasha who visited the states as the guest of the Maharaja.

Last year, Mysore held another elephant hunt in honor of Prime Minister Nehru. Recently, Nehru presented a Mysore elephant, "Indira," to Japanese children.

The Mysore elephant hunt involves several months of preparating, and a great deal of tactical planning. The herdsmen, assisted by the hill tribes, "corden off" a large area and "hustle" the elephant herds into the area by lighting forest fires and beating drums.

In the centre of the "operation theatre," a stockade is built to trap the elephants. This stockade, usually about five acres in area, is built of huge teak-logs, which project spear-like inside the kraal. The stockade is equipped with trap doors which the hunters close ingeniously once the animals are inside.

The herdsmen surround the entire area for several days, collecting the elephants and cleverly driving them towards the gates of the stockade. Expert herdsmen spend days together on tree-tops, eating fruit and nuts, and praying to Ganapathy (the elephant god) for the success of their venture.

MARCH 17 CHILDREN

Both Mrs. Catherine Dingman and her son William were born on St. Patrick's Day, This year in their home at Warkworth, 20 miles north of Trenton, Ont., Mrs. Dingman celebrated her 100th birthday and her son his 78th. Born in Valleyfield, Que., the Dingmans have lived in the Warkworth district for almost a century. Does her own housework, both upstairs and down, reads considerably and is anxious to get out to her garden as soon as the snow leaves. Son William said: "She still bawls me out occasionally." — (CP Photo.)

Supervising these age-old methods of elephant hunting are modern forest officials, equipped with wireless transmission sets and firearms — in case of emergency.

The final day of the hunt is a spectacular affair. The maharaja and his guests assemble in special pavilions erected round the stockade, and watch the huntsmen drive the elephant herds into the kraal.

Inside the "prison," the wild animals — cow-elephants, tuskers and kids — run about like mad, kicking and jostling and trying to get out, but hitting the spearlike teak-logs in the process.

Brantford, Ont., March 23. (CP) —Two 30-year-old district men, Wilfred Abbott and George Grechulk, were sentenced Wednesday to ten years in penitentiary for raping a 44-year-old married woman.

They were convicted by an Assize Court jury last week. Crown evidence was that the woman was waiting for a taxi to take her home from a hotel beverage room when she accepted a ride with the two men.

In pronouncing sentence, Chief Justice J .C. McRuer said it was "one of the most revolting cases I have ever had to try."

"Not only did you rape this woman but a doctor testified she received 12 blows, some of them quite serious. . . ."

Stoke-on-Trent, England — (CP)—Italian pottery decorators are to be brought into North Staffordshire potteries to help increase production for dollar-earning exports.

It is planned to bring to Britain 50 skilled decorators from potteries in Florence and 30 women from those in the Milan area.

The Italians will receive British trade union rates of pay and will be required to join the Pottery Workers' Society. The recruitment plan is sponsored by the Ministry of Labor.

StageDresser's Job Calls for Restraint

London — (CP) — Horace Ridley has been a dresser to leading operatic stars at Covent Garden for 30 years.

No matter how temperamental or excitable some of the continental singers get or how heated the atmosphere in a dressing room, Ridley's job is to keep things calm.

"Sometimes we have to switch a singer into a dress in a few minutes' notice," he said. "It's all right when they have had to get a 140-pound man into a costume made for a 200-pound singer.

"It's the other way round that plays you up."

In such cases Horace sews and pins them, lets out seams, puts in tucks and on time to the dot has his stars in the wings perfectly dressed to make their bow.

Besides keeping an eye on the star's clothes and keeping them calm, Horace has to remember their little whims.

"You must never offer a stage singer his right boot first. That's bad luck. It should always be the left boot."

Ridley, an elderly man with graying hair, is the third of his family to attend the great. He, his mother and his father between them have given 105 years' service.

"But there won't be any more Ridleys after me," he said. "My son Leslie is in business for himself."

Ridley hasn't tired of hearing opera and likes to watch an air or two when he is away from the theatre — walking home or working in his garden.

"Whistling in the theatre is strictly taboo," he said. "Many singers have a strong aversion to it."

Wood-Chip Tires Meet Winter Ice

Victoria, B.C., (CP)—Scores of British Columbia cars will run on sawdust next winter — or sooner, if the weather is unkind.

The new automotive wrinkle doesn't involve a sawdust-powered version of Stanley Steamer, but a new kind of tire tread.

A local tire firm has equipped several taxis and its own trucks with a tread containing built-in hardwood chips to give traction either on snow or ice.

Motorists who have used the tires say they are good for safe travel through two-feet-deep snow or on glassy ice. They lessen dangers of skids and sideslips.

They wear away slightly faster than ordinary tires, giving about 23,000 miles instead of 28,000.

Uranium Discoveries Grow in Importance

Regina — (CP) — Production of uranium may begin in Saskatchewan within two or three years, it is estimated by officials of the provincial mineral resources branch.

So far some 50 deposits have been located in the province. These officials say that, on the basis of "general engineering estimates," 13 of the finds are outstanding.

Some 35 companies involved in the uranium hunt are expected to spend at least $3,000,000 this year in exploration and development. That is double the amount spent in 1949.

Prospecting activity in northern Saskatchewan is expected to be at a record level this summer.

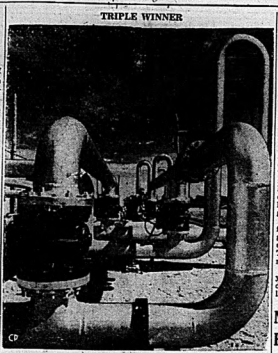
The 50 uranium discoveries of the last 15 years indicate the existence of three uranium fields: Beaverlodge-Goldfields, Black Lake and Lac la Ronge. Experts claim some of the finds compare favorably with ore deposits in producing areas in other parts of the world.

First Discovery

The first discovery of radioactive ore was made in 1935 three miles east of Goldfields. During the Second World War, Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd., a federal crown corporation, took over the development of Saskatchewan's uranium deposits and made 12 more discoveries.

Then, in 1948, prospecting for uranium was thrown open to anyone. In two years another 37 claims were recorded.

The Beaverlodge - Goldfields area contains eight of the discoveries considered "important" by the provincial mineral resources branch. The Black Lake district has three, and the Lac la Ronge field has two.



So far Saskatchewan's mineral development has been small. Inaccessibility of the richest areas, in the far north, has been largely responsible for slow progress.

For 20 years most of the province's mineral output has been made by Hudson's Bay Mining and Smelting Company in their Flin Flon operation which straddles the Manitoba - Saskatchewan border.

COLORFUL FLOWER

The saffron, a species of crocus used for coloring, was introduced to many countries of the world from Asia Minor.

TRIPLE WINNER

This unusual photo of refinery pipes by Al Trotter of Chatham, Ont., won him three awards at the third annual print show of the Commercial and Press Photographers Association of Canada. The three awards, all in the commercial class, were: the Graflex Trophy for the best publicity photo; first prize in the commercial division; and the Latimer Trophy for the best commercial photo.—(CP Photo.)

One-Legged Trapper Uses Crutches, Skis

Timmins, Ont. — (CP) — Indian trappers Xavier Spence, 43, and George Visitor, 33, have one thing in common which distinguishes them from their fellow-trappers in the frozen tundras of the James Bay basin.

Both are active at their rugged task despite the fact that both had their right legs crudely amputated after wilderness accidents.

Xavier Spence uses three snowshoes, one on each crutch and one on his left leg; Visitor has rigged up special skis for his crutches.

Visitor has no sled-dogs and pulls his toboggan himself with a shoulder harness on his trap-line 150 miles from Moosonee, the end of steel in Northern Ontario. The skis are about two feet long and three inches wide.

He lost his leg when an accidental shotgun blast ripped it to shreds, Rough bushland surgery followed.

Xavier Spence lost his leg after gangrene set in when a tree fell on him. With his consent, fellow Crees hit him on the head with a club and removed the leg as he lay unconscious.

He operates a 70-mile trap-line in the lecbound muskeg back of Fort Albert 100 miles up the coast from Moosonee. His arms have become tremendously strong and he has developed phenomenal powers of endurance.

BLAME BOARD OF CONTROL

Toronto, March 22 — (CP) — A group of 30 unemployed men carrying banners marched on the city hall today. George Prager, spokesman for the group, told Board of Control the board was responsible for "this criminal negligence through which families are being condemned to slow starvation."

Tiny Shop Delivers King's Daily Paper

London —(CP)— Every morning at 6.45 the King's morning newspapers are sorted out in a little paper shop off, Piccadilly. Promptly at 7.15 they are delivered at the gates of Buckingham Palace.

"We have had the Royal custom from well before my time," said James Gibbons, the manager who has been with the firm of May and Williams for more than 40 years.

"We served Queen Victoria, and I believe we were serving the Palace even before her day.

"The King and Queen, the two Princesses and Prince Philip and Palace officials are served from this shop."

Tower Prisoner Now Sells Honey

Dublin — (CP) — Norman Baillie-Stewart, 41-year-old pre-war "officer in the Tower" and wartime Nazi broadcaster from Hamburg and Bremen, has arrived here to develop German-Irish trade.

He told reporters: "I've finished with politics."

Baillie-Stewart, once a British army officer and now a German citizen, prefers to be known as "James Scott" for business and social purposes. German goods he will help to sell here include cattle, rabbit skins, dried milk, honey, bicycle parts, Diesel engines and surgical instruments.

In 1933 he was sentenced to five years' imprisonment for giving military secrets to a foreign power, and held in the Tower of London for many months.

In 1946 he began another five-year term for helping Germany during the war. He was released last May.

Netherlands Device Feeds Jets Quickly

Amsterdam, (CP)—Tank trucks capable of fully refueling jet-propelled aircraft with kerosene in 2.5 minutes have been developed by Netherlands engineers.

Calculated to save from 15 to 20 minutes on the operation, depending on the type of aircraft involved, the trucks already are in use.

Their possible advantage to military aircraft is obvious and Western Union officers have been reported studying their adoption as standard equipment for the forces of the Brussels pact powers.

An North Atlantic defence involves arms and equipment standardization among all the Atlantic Pact powers, there is the possibility that the others too, including Canada, will use the Netherlands vehicle.

The kerosene fuel used by the jets is pumped into the aircraft under great pressure through hoses suspended from extension levers designed to avoid their touching the skin of the plane. Damage to fuselage and streamline thus is avoided.

As soon as the plane's tank is full the nozzle closes automatically, the hose is withdrawn and the truck moves on to the next aircraft.

Baby Sitter Costly When Meter Running

Halifax, — (CP) — A veteran Halifax taxi driver has unexpectedly developed a new sideline—baby sitting.

When the cabbie arrived at a city home in answer to a call recently, he was given a thorough once-over by a young couple. Then they put the question. Would he mind the baby while they went out for a couple of hours? They had tried to get a baby sitter, with no luck.

The driver was willing, but what about the cab. With the cost of living what it is, he had to keep the meter ticking.

"That's all right," said the parents, "leave the meter running."

Away went the couple and for 2½ hours the cabbie lounged in an easy chair, checking on the baby every so often. When the parents returned the cabbie checked his taxi meter and collected $7.50. Which amounts to $3 an hour—for baby sitting.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

ATTENTION ALL WHO ARE INTERESTED IN BASEBALL FOR THIS CITY

The other day the Central Ontario Baseball League had its annual meeting. The teams of the district, to wit, Napanee, Kingston, Picton, Belleville and Smith's Falls signified their desire to form the group.

Belleville, this fair city of ours, was NOT REPRESENTED. The executive of the COBL set a deadline for entries. That date is a few days away.

A few baseball-minded residents of this city, have decided to get the feelings of those who are interested in baseball and a Belleville entry at a meeting to be held tonight in Memorial Arena.

We, in this fair hamlet, are being shamed by the action of surrounding communities. Picton, Batawa, Napanee because of surrounding circumstances, are going to enter a team in ball interests at least have the guts to enter a team in a baseball league that should bring back all the old glory of those teams that carried the banner of senior baseball in this district years ago.

Why some will say, where are the old teams of Belleville, Trenton, Bancroft and the public.

There's a spot, we hope, of civic pride in the residents of this village, that the majority of baseball fans, tied with outside teams efforts during the past few years, are far from being satiated.

We feel that the fans of this city would like to see a "local" team entered in the COBL.

We've a city of around 15,000 population. And there's not a member of baseball fandom who would not support a good team—if we had it.

To gentlemen and ladies, we can get it. But we've got to get together in a whole, and put collective shoulders to the wheel.

There is, they say, a possibility of Sunday sports in the city. Whether we are going to say anything about that, Perhaps. We are not going to say anything about it, this weekly, at the moment we are interested in this city being represented in the Central Ontario Baseball League.

We feel that with the co-operation of all concerned, or at least part, that this city can be represented in the league. What Picton, Napanee, Batawa can do, (we're not mentioning Kingston at the moment) surely this city can emulate.

The summer looms ahead. Speaking of that, just what has this city to offer to baseball fandom? Soccer, tennis, and we hear softball interests have, or are, making arrangements for summer programs.

And nothing so. The sports department of this newspaper will support their efforts to the limit. But baseball fandom of this city, and that takes in all walks of life, would like to see the hometown represented in a fairly good brand of its favorite pastime.

It can be done. But, as we said before, it needs the wholehearted co-operation of all who are interested.

Well, tonight's the night. Action is necessary. Let's be "up and doing". The "emergency" meeting is being held at Memorial Arena starting at eight o'clock. It's a conclave that is wide open. It's "our last chance", so to speak, to inject a Belleville entry into the COBL. All lovers and supporters of baseball should turn out, if for no other reason than to find out the "score" and "see what's cookin'".

So come on, fellas. Hockey, hereabouts at least, is "tout fini" for the season. Summer looms ahead. Warm sunny days, the crack of the bat on leather, the rinsing cry of "Play ball", the thrill of the homer, the double play, the ranging efforts of outfielders pulling down potential fourbaggers, are in the offing.

Make it a point to be at Memorial Arena tonight at eight o'clock. You will be surprised when you see "who's there".

RIGHT ON SCHEDULE!

When Sir Rocco Tor Baby, Sam Langford, was fighting Kid Norfolk in Denver, his manager, Joe Woodman, seconding him, showed Langford a telegram offering a big purse for a fight in Boston. It was the end of the first round and Woodman moaned:

"The can's ready in Sam. We would hafta make the train in less than 30 minutes and that means leaving the arena right now."

The bell rang and Langford walked out and shook hands with his opponent.

"Tis fah you, big boy," replied Sam. Bam! And it was. Langford and his manager made the train.

LAST NIGHT'S STARS

Norm Dussault whose third-period counter gave Montreal Canadiens a 2-1 victory over Toronto Maple Brafs.

Roy Conacher of Chicago who tallied twice to give the Black Hawks a 7-5 win over Boston Bruins.

Detroit's Leo Reise and George Gee who bagged two goals each as the Red Wings nosed out New York Rangers 8-7.

Ted Lindsay of Detroit who assisted on a goal to boost his total of assists to 54 and tie a league record set in the 1944-45 season by Montreal's Elmer Lach.

Montreal Canadiens Pull Game Ahead of Toronto in Battle for Second Place

By JACK GRAY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal's irrepressible Canadiens have pulled a game ahead of Toronto Maple Leafs in the see-saw struggle for final second place standing in the National Hockey League behind Detroit Red Wings. And this time they may be there for keeps.

The Canucks scraped by the Leafs 2-1 Wednesday night, pulling a well-nigh final-minute goal by rightwinger Norm Dussault out of their last-ditch-effort basket.

There was a hint that the contest might be costly in a financial sense to coach Dick Irvin of Canadiens. He was reported to have offered $100 to the man scoring the winning goal, the reward thus going to Dussault. But managing director Conn Smythe of the Leafs promptly thumbed through the N.H.L. by-laws to section 23. This he interpreted as providing a $2,000 fine for any club official who offers a bonus to a player or winning a game.

President Laurence Campbell of the N.H.L. wasn't available for immediate comment.

Near-Record Crowd

The crucial (for the pocketbook) nature of the contest between the two first-time rivals brought out a near-record for a week night of 14,578 fans. They were stimulated largely by the fact that a stake of $150 for each player was at issue. The N.H.L. pays $500 apiece to the players of the club finishing second and $350 to members of the third-place club.

That Canadiens took over a commanding lead for the final two games of the season. Their 74 points to Toronto's 72 will count when they wind up the last-place Chicago Black Hawks and Boston Bruins.

In other games Wednesday night Detroit fattened its league-leading advantage over fifth-place Rangers to nine points by 8-7, and Chicago defeated Boston, only other team to finish out of the four-club playoffs, 7-5.

Only 61 Seconds Left

Dussault's game-winning score in the game at Toronto came with 61 seconds to play, breaking up what looked like a tie game up to that point. Leaf's Joe Klukay scored in the initial period. Then the Canadiens came back in the second with Rip Riopelle scoring, assisted by Glen Harmon and Floyd Curry.

The victory gave the Montrealers a lead in their meetings with the Leafs during the season, Canadiens winning five contests to Leaf's four, while four were tied.

Detroit's romping Wings rang up eight goals in the free-wheeling last two periods in defeating the Rangers.

Some 13 players from both teams shared goal-getting honors. Only double scorers being Detroit's George Gee and Leo Reise.

In the Boston contest some 12,049 fans saw Chicago's Roy Conacher fire home three goals as the Black Hawks submerged the Bruins. Two of them in the final stanza when Chicago scored six times to overcome Boston's early lead.

Second of Season

It was Conacher's second three-goal game of the season. The previous one was against the Bruins, came Christmas night. Only other player with a pair of three-goal games during the season is Detroit's Gordie Howe.

Hawk's centre Metro Prystai, who went to a Toronto hospital Saturday night with head lacerations after being checked by Toronto's Bill Ezinicki, was discharged Wednesday. His injury was the cause of some high words between Chicago officials and Leafs' managing director Conn Smythe.

But Wednesday night all was forgiven, Prystai saw the Leafs-Canadiens game sitting with Conn Smythe.

Windsor Spits Even Series With Guelph Biltmores

By The Canadian Press

After last night's performances the Ontario hockey picture, both senior and junior, looks like an outright race right down to the wire.

It took 10 minutes of overtime before Windsor Spitfires came up with a 4-2 win over Guelph Biltmore to square their best-of-seven Ontario Hockey Association Junior "A" series at 2-2 and in the Northern Ontario Hockey Association Senior "A" finals North Bay Black Hawks edged Sault Ste. Marie Grey Hounds 5-4 in extra time to deadlock their best-of-five finals 2-2. One game was tied.

Edmonton Mercurys Reign As 1950 Amateur Champions

By MICHAEL O'MARA
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 23 (CP) — An intermediate team from Edmonton—the hustling, hard-checking Mercurys—reign today as 1950 world hockey champions.

They'll sail for home Wednesday, donning at a jaunty angle the crown worn in previous years by such good Canadian teams as Toronto Granites, Varsity Grads, Edmonton Superiors and Trail Smoke Eaters.

The Mercurys wrapped up the title Wednesday by downing Sweden 3-1 for their seventh straight victory in the 10-day tournament.

The last five triumphs came in the final round-robin. Edmonton polished off Switzerland, the United States, Norway and Britain after defeating Switzerland and Belgium in their preliminaries.

The Mercurys clear-cut superiority over all comers restored to Canadian hockey some of the prestige which slumped on this side of the Atlantic last year when Sudbury Wolves lost out to Czechoslovakia at Stockholm.

Fly In Ointment

There was only one fly in the ointment. Canada weren't here to defend the title. A Czech government ruling kept the iron curtain squad in Prague.

Most hockey observers, however, believed Edmonton would have taken the Czechs into camp by at least a half-dozen goals if they'd shown up. They pointed to Sweden's 5-0 victory over Czechoslovakia in Prague this winter, looked at Wednesday night's Canada-Sweden result and drew the obvious conclusion.

Canadian prestige rose off the ice as well. The youthful, likable Mercurys, led by their level-headed and pleasant-mannered coach, Jimmy Graham, made the best athletic ambassadors Canada has had in Europe since Ottawa's Barbara Ann Scott won the Olympic figure skating title in 1948.

Swarms of Well-Wishers

Every night outside the Canadian dressing room were swarms of autograph seekers and well-wishers. Final proof of their popularity Canada drew the majority of the crowd's support in their match against Britain which they won 12-0.

The only teams to give Edmonton a real battle in their march to the championship were Sweden and the United States. The U.S. squad, arriving in England without sufficient practice, improved every time out.

It wouldn't be fair to pick any stars on the team. The Mercurys are a well-knit outfit, with smooth team-play their forte.

The happiest man in London today is J. A. Christenson, the genial Edmonton business man who backs the club. When the championship was clinched, he beamed from ear-to-ear, almost too proud for words.

The Canadians have a busy program for the next few days. Thursday night they're guests at Canada House, Two more exhibition games are on tap before they sail next Wednesday, against Richmond Friday and Streatham Monday.

It is expected the Mercurys will be given a national welcome in Ottawa, breaking their air journey from the east coast to visit the capital for a day. And then they'll head west for another big welcome in Edmonton.

Marmora Drops First Game to Lakefield 10-9

Paced by Blewett and Jopling, veteran Peterborough hockey stars, the Lakefield squad edged Marmora in Memorial Arena last night in a wide-open free-scoring game to take the first game of the OHA Intermediate "B" series, semi-finals. The score was 10-9. The second game of the two of three series is scheduled for Peterborough Friday night.

It was rough boisterous hockey all the way, with a large delegation from the mid-Hastings village being in attendance. A nip-and-tuck struggle all the way, the scales of victory turned first-one way then the other. Lakefield grabbed a 4-2 lead in the first period. The second session ended with the visitors leading by the same margin after both squads fling home a pair of markers.

The third period saw nine goals scored with the Marmora crew grabbing five. The Hastings County men made a gallant comeback and after being behind three goals at one time of the game battled furiously in an effort to pull victory out of defeat. True, they had an edge on the victors but their play around opposing nets was not all that it should have been.

Fired Five Goals

They fired home five goals in the hectic third period in a valiant effort to overcome the lead. Lakefield, however surged back to tally four goals and the game ended with Marmora within striking distance of at least a tie, battling all the way in a desperate effort to pull out with a win.

Blewett and Nichols scored 3 goals each for the winners, with Kerr and Cavanagh getting two each for the Marmora team.

Eight penalties were handed out by Referees Kerr, McNaught and Bill Holway, four of them going to Wasson, Lakefield player.

The teams:-

Barons Easily Defeat Bisons In First Game

(By The Canadian Press)

Cleveland Barons, who won the western division of the American Hockey League by an impressive margin over the regular season, Wednesday night started the eastern division champions, Buffalo Bisons, 7-1.

It was the opening game of their best-of-seven series 'A' playoff and the Barons had little trouble in rambling through to victory. Second game will be Saturday, again in the Ohio city.

Four other teams are playing off in series 'B'. The best-of-three 'B' series opened Tuesday night with Indianapolis Caps downing St. Louis Flyers 7-1 and Providence Reds beating Springfield Indians 6-4. The four teams are at it again tonight. After the 'B' series are over, the winners will enter another best-of-three affair, the winner of which will take on the Cleveland-Buffalo victor in the league final.

Cleveland didn't get rolling until the second period Wednesday night and for a few minutes in the middle stanza Buffalo had the score tied 1-1.

Cleveland's fast and smoother passing club took over in a hurry however. The team's top goal-getters, Fleming Kelly and Ted Sloan each got a pair of counters, Ray Powell and Jack Derwick tied, and Bobby Carse got the other Barons goals.

Goalie Al NaNbney counted the lone Buffalo goal.

Cornwall Swamps Hull Volants in Second Contest

Ottawa, March 23 (CP)—Cornwall Calumets took a stranglehold on the Eastern Canada Senior Hockey League championship Wednesday night drubbing a game-but-outclassed Hull Volants sextet 14-2 in the second game of the final series.

The one-sided victory gave coach John Deanesy's Calumets a 3-0 lead in games in the best-of-seven series with the third game scheduled at Cornwall Friday. The clubs return here Saturday for the fourth meeting.

Fred Gardner got Calumets into the lead before the game was three minutes old and the Cornwall sextet was never headed with Rheal Savard scoring what proved to be the winning counter four minutes later.

Cornwall led 6-1 at the end of the first period and held an 8-1 advantage going into the final frame.

Savard, Gardner and Jim Dennehy enjoyed a scoring show all their own. While Calumets were piling up a total of 41 points, their big line accounted for an even 20, Savard, a tricky little centre, scored four times and took a hand in two others. Gardner and Dennehy each contributed a pair of counters and split 10 assists evenly.

Bert Lilly tallied three times in the final period for Cornwall while Yves Sarre-Bourret collected two and Wally Gerrard a singleton.

Smiley Meronek got the first Hull marker in the second period and Rogers Legere added the other in the closing period.

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Vancouver, March 23 (CP) — It's weidd state of affairs when a town has a winning team and the fans are not happy about it.

But that's the case with Vancouver's Dominion basketball champion Clover Leafs.

Eric (Vancouver Province) Whitehead has what he believes to be the reason for this about face of fandom.

"The Leafs," explains Eric, "are suffering from the unsavory unpardonable sin of being too good too long."

"Dominion champions," he points out, "are nice, clean-cut, home-loved kids; they are also Vancouver's last hopes of a repeat national title. Yet when they appear on the floor they are well nigh booed off the floor for the terrible crime of playing good and winning basketball."

Eric is not happy about the situation and he has some advice for Vancouver's finicky fans.

"During the season," he says, "the fans can have a dozen hues and loyalties, hate everybody but their own.

"But when our champions are declared, then we should get behind them and pull for our local lads come Toronto or high water."

Tennis How!

As far as the "Montreal-dominated" Canadian Lawn Tennis Association is concerned, Vancouver could well be suffering from beri-beri or some other dreaded disease, thinks Bud (Vancouver Sun) Elsie.

For the third straight year, the Canadian senior and junior tennis championships have been awarded to the east.

"In fact," complains Bud, "a Montreal-Toronto axis has so monopolized Davis Cup ties that Vancouver has never been host to a single round in the 21 years of Canada's miserable efforts to win the mug."

While eastern grounds for beefing are in the fact that "40 percent of the top-ranking men players in Canada are from Vancouver."

In addition, two Vancouver players have won the junior championship the last four years in a row.

"But," he exclaims, "it's obvious that you have to have more than the best players to get anything from the C.L.T.A., unless you live in Montreal."

"Why," he said," confides Elsie "even hogtied in whispering that Montreal is getting a bit piggish in grabbing all the tennis wares."

STRAY DOG PET SAVES LIVES OF "HIS" FAMILY

Hensall, Ont., March 22—(CP)— A stray dog taken in as a children's pet was credited Tuesday night with saving the lives of his "family" as flames raged through their house. Mrs. Floyd Adair was sleeping downstairs with her three small children when she was aroused by the barking of the dog. She opened the door to the garage and was met with a burst of flame. She called the Hensall fire brigade, and guests of a reception in the town hall helped carry furniture to a neighboring house.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

There is one lesson in play that no bridge student dare ignore. It is: Count in advance the tricks you are likely to lose; plan the safest way of saving as many as you need.

In a duplicate tournament came this deal:

NORTH
♠ K 7
♥ 10 8 6
♦ A 7 4 3
♣ J 3 2

WEST
♠ 9 6 5 4
♦ A 2
♣ 9 8 6 5

EAST
♠ Q J 10
♥ 9 7 5
♦ K 10 9 8 5
♣ K 10

SOUTH
♠ A 8
♥ A K Q J 4 3
♦ Q 6 2
♣ Q 7 4

The bidding should go like this:

South	North
1 H	2 C
2 H	3 H
4 H	Pass

The opening one bid by south promises three tricks. Plus tentative response by north promises three. The second bid by south was not an increase in contract and therefore, did not promise any more tricks.

The second bid by north was a raise and showed a fourth trick. The third bid by south was a raise and showed a sixth trick in that hand, six and not ten; what they are required to make.

Opening lead from west was diamond jack. Dummy hand goes down. Take stock. No spades will be lost. A trick is lost in the first trump ace. You can afford to lose one trick in each minor suit.

Therefore, plan the play in such way that no more than one trick will lost in each minor. If you are unable to plan this with absolute certainty, do so with as much safety as possible.

Diamond jack lead may be a singleton. If east wins this with the king a diamond return will be ruffed by west. This will defeat the contract if a club trick is also given up.

So, reduce the danger. Win the first trick with diamond ace and lead a trump. West jumps up with heart ace and leads a club to tempt a dummy finesse. Grab with club ace and pull remaining trumps.

Expert bridge is often the simplest.

Tavern Owners Favor Women Bartenders in N.J.

Keansburg, N.J., Mar. 23 (AP) —32 liquor dealers and tavern owners here are in favor of women bartenders.

They signed a petition asking the borough council to repeal a local ordinance banning barmaids.

As volunteer firemen, they said, most of the liquor dealers have to close shop each time the fire siren roars. They want to make it legal for women to take over when the men are on fire duty.

Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, March 23—(AP)—The reason movie stars get into so many headline scrapes, says Director Alfred Hitchcock, is because "they are really children."

This is not likely to endear him to members of the Screen Actors Guild. We were discussing Gene Evelyn Johnson's proposals to curb allegedly immoral filmsters. Hitchcock offered his own idea of why actors do things that draw such criticism.

"Why, they are really children," he declared. "You could hardly expect them all to be adult when at least a third of their lives is spent in make-believe."

The director cited Ingrid Bergman as an example. He known the Swede well, having directed her in three pictures. He believes she got into her present difficulties because "in many respects she is quite naive."

He added that over-publicizing of movie stars has greatly increased public interest in their get "out of line." Now that the public knows the inner life of the stars so intimately, it is up in arms when film favorites are involved in scandal.

Old Days Different

"In the old days," he recalled, "the real lives of the stars were separate from their screen personalities. For instance, Mary Pickford was merely a beautiful curly-headed child to the public. Stars became legendary figures.

"It is significant that there were only three big scandals in the silent era—Wally Reid, Fatty Arbuckle and William Desmond Taylor. Reid was involved in a dope scandal; Arbuckle was acquitted after three trials in manslaughter; and, merely a death of an actress; the murder of Desmond Taylor brought several film names but was never solved.)

Ray Robinson Wins by K.O. In First Round

Philadelphia, March 23 —(AP) Ray (Sugar) Robinson's welterweight title was more secure than ever on the veteran boxer's hand today after his short-order knockout of Georgie (also Sugar) Costner.

Costner had been pointing toward a title bout with Robinson but was Wednesday night's over-the-weight at Convention Hall.

Robinson, who weighed 154 pounds—four more than Costner —caught the Camden contender with a hard right after 30 seconds of action.

The champion then switched to the body for a few blows, landed another right on Costner's jaw and finished him off with a left hook to the chin at 2:49 of the initial round of their scheduled 10-round bout.

For the champion it was his 107th victory in 110 professional fights, 74 of them by knockouts. Robinson received $15,000 of the $53,762 ($39,089 net) paid by the crowd of 11,747.

Milt Schmidt Trophy Winner

Boston, March 23 — (AP) — Milt Schmidt, captain of the National League's Bruins, again has been voted the Elizabeth C. Dufresne trophy as Boston's outstanding hockey player of the home season.

The trophy, awarded for the 25th season on vote of hockey writers, will be presented to Schmidt Sunday night when the season ends here.

Last Sunday he was the third annual winner of the C. F. Adams trophy, voted by fans polled all season for their choice as the team's top performer.

It will be the second time Milt, who first played with the Bruins briefly in the 1936-37 season, has won the trophy individually.

He shared it with Woody Dumart and Bobby Bauer during the 1941-42 season after which the three Kitchener kids went into the armed forces and served three years.

Schmidt, who became 32 March 5, last won the award in 1947.

He joins Johnny Crawford and Dit Clapper as two-time winner of the trophy. Eddie Shore won it three times.

Writers voted in each quarter of the season on the basis of five points for first, three for second and one for third. Schmidt collected 24 points. Rookie Jack Gelineau was runner-up with 87.

FACE HUGE BILL

Victoria, B.C., March 23, (CP) —British Columbia faces a bill of $240,000 for care of Japanese indigents uprooted from the coast during the war. This is almost double the amount paid last year.

E. I. Kenney, acting Health Minister, explained Wednesday in the legislature that an agreement whereby the federal government paid half the cost expired this year.

Don Gallinger's Hopes Dashed By Message

(By The Canadian Press)

Don Gallinger's hopes of a professional baseball career with the Philadelphia Phillies appear to be over.

The youngster who was suspended from organized hockey two years ago on gambling charges said in Kitchener Wednesday he had received word from Joe Reardon, directgr of the Phillies' farm system, that an invitation to try out at the National League's Clearwater, Fla., training camp has been cancelled.

Gallinger, a third-baseman, hopes it's all a misunderstanding. When he arranged with Phillies' scout Joe Sartoria for the try-out, he wrote Baseball Commissioner A. B. (Happy) Chandler, asking if his National Hockey League suspension would affect his baseball status.

Gallinger said Chandler told him he would consider his case when the matter arose.

Gallinger was suspended indefinitely by M.N.L. President Clarence Campbell when gambling charges were levelled against him and Billy Taylor both members of the Boston Bruins. Taylor was barred from organized hockey for life.

The English International soccer team which will tour Canada and the United States this season will play at least three games in Ontario, in Toronto and a single game in Windsor.

The first game in Toronto will be on May 24 against an Ontario all-star team with the second set tentatively for late May against another English eleven, Manchester United. Windsor will see the International June 17. A Western Ontario team will supply the opposition.

Charles J. Murray, the man credited with giving Jack Dempsey his first chance in the ring, died Wednesday at his home in Buffalo after a long illness. He was 61.

Murray, a sports promoter in Buffalo for many years, was last active in attempts to obtain a National Football League franchise for Buffalo three months ago. For several years prior to the formation of the All-American Conference, of which Buffalo was a member, Murray had promoted N.F.L. exhibition games in Buffalo.

At Los Angeles, Glen Davis Wednesday cast his athletic future with the Los Angeles Rams pro football club. Passing a number of attractive offers from baseball or league baseball organizations, the 23-year-old "Mr. Outside" of Army fame formally signed a one-year contract with the Rams.

Montreal Y.M.H.A. Wednesday night at Montreal scored a 58-43 victory over Toronto Tri-Bells in the first game of a best-of-three series for the Eastern Canada Basketball championship.

AT THE BELLE

Cecil B. DeMille's Samson and Delilah

'Samson and Delilah' is the first film for Angela Lansbury in which she plays her own age. She was 18 in "If Winter Comes", 45 in "State of the Union" and, considerably beyond voting age in "The Picture of Dorian Grey". Fans who think she is in her forties may be surprised to know she is only 23. Angela, London-born, comes from a long line of actors and career people. Her grandfather was the late George Lansbury, P. C., one of England's most articulate and best loved Socialists.

Warmest friendship developed between Mature and DeMille, despite Mature's unconventional approach, such as slapping DeMille on back with remark: "Stick with me, C. B. and you'll be wearing diamond studs!" On another occasion Mature chirped: "If you handle yourself right, C. B., may do another picture for you." Mature confided to others: "C.B. doesn't mind — he knows that I think he's a genius." . . . After haircut scene, Hedy Lamarr demanded one dollar from Mature, on basis of current union barber rates.

DeMille, who likes to insert in his pictures little items related to his ancestry, named a frontier tavern 'The Gilded Beaver' which happens to be the name of the ship that brought the first DeMille's from Holland in 1658. The "D" in DeMille's name stands for Blount. In Pennsylvania, there was a frontier settlement called "Blount's Landing."

Veteran filmgoers will see familiar faces of silent days in scenes with Anita Stewart, Fritz Leiber, Frank Reicher, Crawford Kent, Frank Mayo . . . DeMille gave movie chance to 9-year-old Brenda Dockweiler, daughter of Judge George P. Dockweiler of the Los Angeles Superior Court. Brenda's debut is in village street scene with Mike Mazurkiu . . . Fay Holden, famous mother of the Andy Hardy series, is credited with a fine piece of acting as Samson's mother. She made a big jump in going from Mickey Rooney to Mature . . . Farmer Bates' stand-in is dark-eyed, dark-haired Sylvia Lamar — same spelling, no relation.

Samson and Delilah, in Technicolor, brings Tuesday for the last time at the Belle Theatre. Continuous daily.

We were eating supper being liver and onions in pop's honor, and pop said to ma, I hope you'll excuse me if I dont take a 3rd helping, but I have an athletic evening ahead of me, I'm meeting the Schmeeder around at the bowling alley for a serious friendly game, he said.

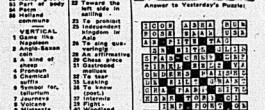
How can you possibly bare the thawt of opening an intire evening in the company of sutch a person? ma said, and pop said, Why, Luke Smeeder is quite a likeable chap.

Now really William, I mean really, he's got the silliest, loudest longest laff that ever issued from a human bean, ma said, And to add the finishing touch to the last straw, he laffs at positively nuthing and absolutely everything. The man should of been a hyena, and I'm not sure he's not, she said.

Well maybe, but there's something very pleasant about Luke pop said, and ma said, Everybody knows he neyer read a book in his life, unless perhaps it was the ferst joke book ever printed on the Ark, Goodness, when he tells a story you know you've already heard it before he starts, and you're sure he's never going to end, she said.

Luke's stories are a bit over age and utter length, but the fellow has a certain charm about him, pop said, and ma said, But William, when he's not exploding with meeningless laffter he's either sniffling or grunting or brushing cigar ashes off his vest or spilling more n.

Just the same, my dear, there's something apealing about him, pop said and ma said, Then tell me what it is, for land sakes.



I dont know unless perhaps it's his nice perronality, pop said, and ma said, Oh, I give up.

Which she did.

C.N.R. AND T.C.A.

In the Senate, Senator George H. Ross (L—Alberta) suggested the amalgamation of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways into a single government-operated line is the only solution to soaring freight-rate costs.

There was an echo of Mr. Drew's charges during last year's election campaign about the efficiency of the North Star aircraft used by the T.C.A.

Mr. Ross, citing reasons for lower T.C.A. traffic, said there had been "rumors" last year about the efficiency of the North Star, but those rumors, he added, now were proven unfounded.

Drew Soon on Feet

Mr. Drew jumped to his feet with the statement that there had been no rumors about the North Stars, only statements based on instructions to T.C.A. crews which mentioned difficulties experienced with North Star engines.

That would, he said pointedly, be dealt with before the committee next week.

Mr. Drew criticized the C.N.R. for curtailing passenger services by 25 per cent recently and said he did not think the explanation that there had been a coal shortage could be accepted for the whole period of curtailment. Large supplies of Canadian coal had been available in the east and the west.

A brief debate developed on freight rates and M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader, said he thought the time had come for "real" transportation policy to establish "fair" rates for all of Canada. This was not only for railways, but all forms of transportation.

Mr. Chevrier, replying to questions, said he did not know what the Royal commission now studying transportation would recommend, but he believed it had power to recommend a general transportation policy. He hoped a report would be completed this year, probably late in the year.

Term Not Essential

Civil marriage would deprive ministers of the opportunity of marrying "non-believers" and placing their religious views before them.

Miss Agnes Macphail (CCF—York East) said "as an impartial observer of marriage" it was rare likely many persons would avail themselves of civil marriage "but if they want it I can't see why they shouldn't have it. The form had little to do with the marriage," she said.

Rev. J. W. Foote (PC-Durham), a Presbyterian minister, said doctrine of the Roman Catholic and Church of England denominations forbade marriage of divorced persons and these people now were being married by minister of denominations other than the one they belonged to. This tended to root people out of congregations to which they were adjusted and disrupt their lives in the religious community. Church doctrine allowed for blessing of civil marriages after they were performed.

Mr. Millard said introduction of civil marriage was part of a process of "breaking down the moral fibre", marked by proposals to introduce Sunday sport and extension of liquor outlets.

Bill Approved

Provincial Secretary Welsh said the bill was approved by all religious leaders of the community except "one or two rabbis and they were autonomists."

Attorney-General Porter said he would introduced at the committee stage an amendment to bill restrictive covenants bill amplifying the reference to "race or creed". He would add the words "color, nationality, ancestry or place of origin."

The House simultaneously debated two bills to reduce discrimination in employment—one by Eamon Park (CCF—Toronto Dovercourt) and one by Mr. Salsberg. Also debated was a bill by J. G. Brown (Lib.—Waterloo North) to give industrial workers one week's annual vacation after one year's continuous service and two weeks after two years. Labor Minister Daley said that since there were a number of similar bills on the order paper he would withhold comment until they all could be discussed.

Felt Tired, Rundown, Back Ached; Stomach Rebelled

Is Delighted with Improvement in Health and Recommends Syntona to All Who Suffer Similarly — Says Stomach Felt Better from Few Doses. Nerves Calmed Down, Pains Went Away.

"For a long time I was troubled with a dull aching pain in my back and became nervous, tired and rundown, but since I've been taking Syntona I am delighted with the improvement in my health," said Mrs. Gertrude Fritsch, 136 Hunter Street West, Hamilton, Ontario, in a recent report.

"I couldn't seem to get my proper sleep and felt very out almost from the time I got up in the morning. Food that I ate often gave me indigestion, gas and heartburn. I was subject to headaches and dizzy spells and many days my limbs, joints and muscles were very sore and painful.

"I heard of so many people who had used Syntona with good results that I finally decided to try some and almost from the first dose I noticed a change for the better. My appetite improved and I could eat without gas, indigestion or heartburn afterwards. As I continued taking this medicine my nerves calmed down, gradually the pains left my back, joints and muscles and now I sleep better, feel more rested in the mornings and am free of headaches and dizzy feelings.

"You may use my experience if it will help others who suffer similarly to get relief as I did."

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

Coal May Lose To Oil Gordon Warns Producers

Toronto, March 23 — (CP) — Donald Gordon warned Canadian coal interests that their product faces stiff competition and declared they would lose their Canadian and American markets to a "serious rival fuel — oil.

"It will be no use crying after the rail-way's gone. Your dealer will be taking action now," the railways' president told a press conference yesterday.

Mr. Gordon said diesel engines now are as efficient as the "last one-third of what it would cost to convert" from coal to oil.

"I would like to see the coal industry take a realistic interest and push ahead with research," he said. "To my knowledge, none of our coal operators are doing any research toward the more efficient utilization of coal by the railways.

At present the C.N.R. consumes 7,000,000 - 8,000,000 tons of coal a year, of which about one-third comes from Canadian mines.

Although diesels were much more economical and efficient, the C.N.R. would proceed cautiously in converting to the oil burners, Mr. Gordon indicated. He said the complete abolition of coal burners would have a "very serious impact" on Canada's coal producing areas.

Curtain Raising On Lake Shipping

Cleveland, O., March 23—(AP) — The curtain on another shipping season is slowly rising throughout the Great Lakes.

A few automobile and oil transports already are in operation, and cargoes in the lower lakes and limestone and coal carriers will join them almost any day.

Ice in the upper lakes, the Straits of Mackinac and the St. Mary's River is unusually heavy however. It probably will be three weeks before interlake traffic in coal and iron ore begins.

But by April 15, when the regular Maine insurance rates become effective, all of the 12,000 lake sailors are expected to be back at work.

Barking of Trapped Sea Lions Angers Beach Residents

Redondo Beach, Calif., Mar. 23 (AP) — Neighbors finally complained about the constant barking coming from the Southern California Edison Company steam plant.

Barking from a steam plant? That's right, and it wasn't dogs, either. It was sea lions. Seems that three sea lions had been trapped for months in an underground pool at the plant that connects with the ocean through a 1,100-foot conduit.

Darcy McBride, a marine expert, was commissioned to capture the noisy prisoners. Two were captured in nets Wednesday. McBride and his helpers still are trying to get the third.

McBride said one of those captured was a 350-pound male known to have been in the pool for a year. The captive animals had plenty of food because fish also get into the underground pool.

Complains of Price Of Cup of Coffee, Gives $100 Tip

Denver, Colo., March 23 (AP)— Mrs. Dorothy Hawkins, a red-headed waitress, caught a tough customer Wednesday when a green Cadillac pulled into a drive-in.

The driver complained about having to pay 21 cents for two cups of coffee, and didn't like drinking it out of paper cups.

What's the largest tip you ever got?" he asked as he left.

"I dunno, maybe a dollar," Mrs. Hawkins replied.

The hard to please customer dropped a $100 bill in her hand.

They were charged with manslaughter of East European slave workers and of causing bodily injuries by whopping prisoners.

Belgian Workers Stone Street Cars, Motorman Beaten

15,000-Man Parade Erupts In Violence at Brussels

The 80-year-old politician had been asked to form a cabinet to break the deadlock which followed the indecisive 57.6-percent vote for the King's return in the referendum March 12.

Angry crowds battled armed police in the heart of the capital at more than 20,000 workers in the city and the French-speaking walloon provinces staged the 24-hour strike, called by the Socialist-dominated general federation of labor.

University students, defying 200 gendarmes with rifles, gas masks and tear gas bombs, burned effigies of priests, chanting "down with the clergy" and "abdication."

About 5,000 workers joined the parade at the start near the Socialist party headquarters. They chanted "strike" and "abdication". It was good humored at the outset but as the numbers grew marchers increased their mood turned surly and violence broke out.

The street battle was running in defiance of the Socialist call to a general strike. Violence followed.

The parade, held despite a police ban, tied up traffic for more than two hours in the busy Brussels shopping district.

Paul-Henri Spaak, Socialist leader, told the paraders before they began that a return of King Leopold would lead to "grave trouble for our country."

Country Split

The Socialists and other anti-Leopold forces say the advisory referendum which showed 57.6 per cent of the Belgians favoring his return has split the country. In some areas — particularly in areas dominated by the Walloons — Leopold won only 40 per cent of the vote.

Leopold's foes have been unwilling to form a cabinet because of the armed forces to the Germans in the Second World War and his marriage to a Flemish commoner. The cabinet fell Saturday when the Liberals refused to support a Christian Socialist government. The new parliament recall the king. No solution of the cabinet crisis is in sight.

Elsewhere in the country—particularly in Flanders—working was normal to the south—hundreds of thousands of workers joined in the 24-hour general walkout the Socialists had called.

Catholic Labor unions, affiliated with the pro-Leopold Social Christian (Catholic party) opposed the walkout.

TWO FELLOWSHIPS FOUNDED

Toronto, March 24 — (CP) — Establishment of two medical fellowships by the Ontario Hodgkin Branch of B'Nai B'Rith, one for polio research at the Hospital for Sick Children and another — for purposes not yet designated — at the Mount Sinai Hospital was announced Thursday.

C.N.R. VIGOROUS BUT FINANCIALLY 'IN THE RED'

Ottawa, March 24— (CP)— Physically strong and vigorous but financially in the red again —that's the 1949 story of Canadian National Railways.

The government-operated, 33,000-mile system hit the half-billion dollar mark in earnings for the first time in its 28-year history last year. But on its books it had $42,000,000 in net income, $9,000,000 more than the 1948 deficit.

The 1949 annual report of North America's largest railway system was tabled in the Commons Thursday by Transport Minister Chevrier. It spoke of continued expansion and modernization, of new trackage and new lines of locomotives coming into operation. But the largest section was given to an explanation of the worsening

Attlee Govt. Again Sustained By 48-Vote Margin

London, Mar. 24 (AP) — The government by Thursday night defeated by a 48-vote margin a Conservative attempt to trim down a supplementary estimate to meet food costs in the fiscal year ending in April.

It was Labor's largest show of strength in the new parliament elected Feb. 23.

The test came in the first "snap division" on surprise vote, of the session. The life of Prime Minister Attlee's government was at stake.

Labor has a majority of only four seats in the House of Commons which has a membership of 625 members. On three previous occasions when the cabinet's existence depended upon the outcome, the government mustered majorities of 14, 25 and 19 votes.

Some 20 Labor members and approximately 40 Conservatives apparently were absent Thursday night.

The estimate of £13,000,000 ($40,000,000) was presented by Food Minister Maurice Webb. The Conservatives' motion to trim this amount was defeated 328 to 280.

DIES ON 83RD BIRTHDAY

Hamilton, March 24. (CP)—A member of an old pioneer family, Mrs. Elma Brown, widow of Cyrus Brown, died suddenly Thursday on the 83rd anniversary of her birthday. She died in the home she had lived in become ate a young bride of 20, on the banks of the Chippawa Creek near Welland.

Surviving are five sons and five daughters; a brother, Cyrus Robins, of St. Catharines, and a sister.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Toronto, March 24 — (CP) — Synopsis: Record March weather has been dominated by a succession of storm centres moving rapidly across the map. The one which brought snow and rain to Thursday's criteria on Thursday is along the Atlantic seaboard this Friday morning on its way toward Newfoundland. Another disturbance in this series, now over Lake Superior, is headed for Michigan. As it approaches Southern Ontario, warm air coming up from the Mississippi Valley will bring mild weather to most of the province today and occasional light rain to southwestern counties by this afternoon.

On Saturday, the day will be dull and wet over the southern half of the province as this next storm travels along the lower lakes during the day.

FLOOR PRICES PUT ON PERMANENT BASIS IN HOUSE

Time Limit Taken From Legislation

Ottawa, March 24—(CP)—The government's power to establish widely-sought floor prices for the products of Canada's farms and fisheries moved a step closer to permanency in the Commons Thursday.

In an atmosphere of general agreement, the chamber gave first reading to bills to strip the time limit from legislation providing for floor prices. As the statutes now stand, they must be extended yearly. With passage of the bills they will become permanent.

The House also gave reading to a bill to continue the administration's power to negotiate food contracts with Britain, and initiated preliminary steps to consolidate in one statute all acts dealing with the armed forces.

The floor-price legislation provided the big debate of the day. Opposition members, while generally approved of it, felt that the government could go further by way of providing stability for agriculture. They wanted to know either was for so-called "parity" prices or fixed-prices posted in advance.

In the Senate, Senator Gray Turgeon, Liberal, Carleton, Ont., suggested Nationalist China withdraw its representative from the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, in protest against the other meeting of the Big Four powers.

Agriculture Minister Gardiner, piloting the farm legislation, told the chamber he has been "pressed" western farmers against depleting their soil by over-grow-flow of sales to the high-priced United States market.

Western Herds Drop

Western herds have dropped by 2,000,000 cattle since the American market was reopened two years ago. If this trend continued, western farmers would wonder what was happening to their production.

Set Road Blocks For Two Escapees

Timmins, March 24—(CP)— Provincial police today sent out road blocks and set up boats in a search for two men who escaped Thursday night from Monteith Industrial Farm, about 40 miles from Timmins.

They are Ward St. Amour, 23 and Leonard A. Smart, alias A. Chrisman, 24, both from the North Bay area.

Farm superintendent D. R. Whyte said today they were trusties working in the kitchen when they escaped. They wore overalls and denim.

St. Amour was sentenced Nov. 29, 1949, to one year for auto theft. Smart received a nine month concurrent sentence on each of two charges of breaking and entering and theft. He was sentenced Dec. 30, 1949.

Franco Just Plain Horse but Best 'Skidder' During Cutting Season

Kapuskasing, March 24 (CP)— He may not be a Seabiscuit or a citation but he's the best of his kind.

His name is Franco and he's a raw-boned, red-coated, 1900-pound horse that wouldn't hesitate to eat oats by the feedbag if he thought it would help your shoulder if you stood close enough.

Nobody in this Northern Ontario district knows what sort of horse Franco is. He hasn't got a pedigree. Nobody knows his parents. He's just plain horse.

But, man, can he pull: When he leans into a load at camp 40 of nearby Spruce Falls Power and Paper Company, he's a one-horse team.

And his intelligence is on a par with his brute power. Franco works without reins to guide him. Bushmen say he knows his job as well as they do.

Franco and another large horse once hauled a 19-ton load of logs 1 1-2 miles on a sleigh. Maybe it's co-incidental that the other horse is dead now.

While Franco regularly "skids" 120 cords of wood a day during the cutting season, something he has been doing for the last eight years, the good worker's back horse skids four cords and is retired after four years.

The animal's great strength and intelligence is supported by professional opinion.

"Franco is the greatest horse I have ever seen," says Clyde, a percheron, or a Belgian. Then I tell them about Franco."

He figures the animal is between 12 and 14 years old. It was bought from a New Liskeard horse dealer eight years ago.

Gen. Eisenhower Says He Has Disarmed Below Danger Point; Outlines New Program

New York, March 24 — (AP) — Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower said Thursday night that in the present atmosphere of world tension the United States has reduced its armaments below the safety level.

And, he said, the heads of government around the world know that this is the case.

The Supreme Allied Commander in Europe during the Second World War cited universal disarmament as a major, ultimate key to true international peace.

But he emphasized that the U. S. cannot safely risk its defenses, even to the point it already has, "until we have certain knowledge that all nations are doing likewise."

To show weakness, in the face of Soviet strength, he said, is "well nigh as criminal as war itself."

Eisenhower, now president of Columbia University, addressed about 1,200 persons at the first in a series of Columbia sessions dedicated to international peace.

He said the "formula for success" in this area has four points, fourfold:

"First, justice, freedom and opportunity for all men; second, international understanding; third, disarmament; fourth, United Nations . . . with a police power sufficient enough to earn universal respect."

But, with a view to present world situation, he said:

"America has already disarmed to the point that in some directions even beyond the extent—that I, with a deep concern for her present safety, could possibly advise . . .

He said that the "heads of government everywhere, even the most suspicious and fearful, know that the American arms program has sunk below the level of reasonable defence."

This has happened, he said, although "a war of aggression remains a constant threat to peaceful nations."

He said this threat would continue as long as one power—explainly Russia — "builds and maintains a military machine far beyond the recognized needs of reasonable security."

Eisenhower discounted any chances for a true peace based on any single, "high level conference."

"Any agreement, though it should bear the seal and ribbon of every chancellery in the world," he said, "is worth no more than the confidence placed by each signer in the good faith and integrity of the others."

Such confidence, he said, does not exist today.

But Eisenhower did not rule out the need for top-level world conferences.

"By all means," he said, "let us have them, but only especially with the view and purpose of reaching the required level of confidence and confidence, even as a substitute — of developing practical and mutually enforceable measures and reciprocal arrangements calculated to lessen the danger of war."

He added that it is "far better to risk a war of words and negotiation than crash a peace, which would be the certain extinction of free man's ideas and ideals."

Italian Says Flying Disks Not Supernatural nor Martian, Designed in Germany, Italy

Rome, March 24 — (AP) — An Italian scientist, he said today that types of flying disks were designed and studied in Germany and Italy as early as 1942.

Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini, he added, were interested in the instrument, the idea of which was developed concurrently both in Italy and Germany.

Flying disks or saucers have been reported sighted recently in many parts of the world. There has been no scientific confirmation of the existence of such things, nor any universally accepted explanation of what their purpose might be.

The Italian scientist, Giuseppe Belluzzo, made Italian news reports on projectiles and cannons and builder in 1905 of the first steam turbine ship. He made his declarations in Rome's Independent Giornale D'Italia.

"There is nothing supernatural or Martian about flying disks," he said, "but they are the result of national application of recent technique."

Belluzzo, a former deputy and senator and minister of national economy under Mussolini, expressed the opinion that "some people are exploiting the mystery to study them."

Stories of flying disks in Italian skies have been frequent. The latest report came last night from Bologna, where several persons said they saw a luminous object hovering over the air spy leaving a fiery trail.

Waters Threaten Riverbank Folk At Long Branch

Toronto, March 24 — (CP) — Flood fears of the Etobicoke River today continued to threaten homes of riverbank dwellers in a section of suburban Long Branch.

A forecast of milder weather and possibly some rain by tonight added to the worries of some residents whose homes are on low-lying flatland in the lakeshore village in the west end of Toronto.

An ice block near the point at which the river empties into Lake Ontario sent water coursing down residential streets and forced some residents to leave their homes. A shuttle service with trucks was operated around the flooded flats for the benefit of some 30 marooned families.

Refuse to be Moved

Four expectant mothers refused to be moved.

In the Etobicoke suburb of Scarboro, 60 school children were still unable to cross a waterlogged bridge spanning Highland Creek. For the second consecutive day, they were given a holiday.

An expectant mother Thursday refused to leave her home in Long Branch as flood waters from the Etobicoke River swelled around her doorstep, Mrs. Alvin Todd said she would stay and "hope for the best" while her husband and two daughters remained with her.

Robber Obtains $380 From Garage Safe

Burks Falls, March 24 — (CP) —A persistent safe-cracker finally obtained $380 from a garage safe here early today after making three attempts to open it.

A young Sudbury man was arrested in connection with the robbery and is held in the city jail.

The man, now in North Bay district jail, gave his name as Jean Bernard, 24. Shortly after his arrest, Provincial Police officers, he said: "I wasn't going to starve."

Using garage tools, the safe-cracker battered the safe with sledge hinges. That method failing, he then chiselled off the safe dial. Still that failed to open it.

In desperation, he dumped the safe over on its face and chiselled a hole in the back of it — at the exact spot where the cash box was.

When arrested Bernard had $30 on his $25 a week police where $250 had been hidden.

ADMITS THEFT OF LITTER

Hamilton, March 24 (CP) — Stephen Cato Cabo, 26-year-old animal clerk, pleaded guilty today to the theft of a letter containing $1 bills.

The letter was directed to the Household Finance Company.

Observing that the handling of the mails was an extremely serious offence, the magistrate send Cako to the Ontario reformatory for one year definite and one year indefinite.

ANTI-COMMUNIST PLAN IS READY TO BE LAUNCHED

U.S. Will Give Aid For Southwest Asia

Washington, Mar. 24 (AP)—The United States is about ready to launch a new anti-Communist fight to block red expansion beyond the borders of China—with success by no means certain.

Key congressmen will get a detailed look at the situation next Monday. Ambassador Philip C. Jessup, who has just returned from a survey mission for State Secretary Dean Acheson, will report to the Congress.

Jessup made an initial report to Acheson Thursday at the airport through the Far East from Japan to India. He was expected to confer with the secretary further on measures which may be undertaken by the economic, political and military assistance fields.

One project expected under consideration is to speed token aid shipments to Indo-China and Southeast Asia's non-Communist countries. Acheson's associates believe the time has come for the United States to back up with action its repeated promises of help against Communism.

Responsible informants say the administration has decided that communists working with communist China, such as those in Indo-China, are already building up their strength by supplying Ho Chi Minh's forces in that area with estimated at 500,000 men, north of the Southern Vietnam (Indo-China) borders.

The central problem which confronts Acheson and his advisers, as they face up to final decisions on action, is said to be the danger by two main facts: the disorganization and weakness of forces in Southeast Asian countries generally and the deep-rooted bitterness against western colonialism of former years. The communists are making capital of both facts, exploiting weakness where they can and propagandizing the moves of the western powers as colonial imperialism.

Responsible here feel there is better than a 50-50 chance of holding the line there in Indo-China, but also feel the difficulties are great, especially in Indo-China, which is regarded as the critical point of the struggle.

Driver Charged After Accident

Port Credit, March 24—(CP)— While broken power lines blazed and crackled around them, five men escaped from a car that overturned early today to rescue an unconscious man and woman from the wreckage of their wrecked truck.

Mrs. Ethel Smart, 53, was taken to a Toronto hospital in serious condition after three policemen, two garagemen and a cab driver pulled her from her husband's car. Gilbert Smart, 56, wife was charged with dangerous driving.

Police said McCorvie sideswiped a Toronto Transportation Commission bus, knocking a hydro pole carrying 64,000 volts and brought the wires plunging down.

Scientists Able to Turn Memories On and Off During Brain Surgery

Baltimore, March 24 — (AP)— A 14-year-old schoolboy undergoing brain surgery under a local anaesthetic was conscious.

The surgeon took a fine wire carrying a small charge of electricity and touched it to a certain area of the boy's exposed brain.

The boy was sitting in a armchair, the youngster exclaimed.

The electrode was removed. The men in the armchair vanished.

Then it was touched to another area. This time the boy viewed "a man fighting."

Dr. Wilder G. Penfield, world-famed brain surgeon, told John Hopkins doctors Thursday night that the electrical charge had activated dreams the boy had stored away.

Dr. Penfield is Professor of Neurology and Neurosurgery at McGill University and Director of the Montreal Neurological Institute. He is giving a series of lectures at Johns Hopkins University.

He told how scientists are now able to turn memories and dreams on and off during brain surgery.

Each part of the brain has a particular function. He explained that through electrical stimulation, doctors can find the brain's various centres that make us act, feel, remember, and think and talk.

Dr. Penfield gave several case histories showing that when the electrode caused a certain reaction in a patient, the same reaction occurred when the same electrical charge was applied to the same area on another patient.

One was that of the boy and his dreams.

Dr. Penfield described the process as "a startling discovery (that) should have profound significance in the field of psychology, provided we can interpret the facts properly."

He said that the experiments on 200 different cases have indicated that there is some mechanism of the brain that "inherits" — presses back — other memory patterns in the same area as the one being "used" at the time.

Czechoslovakian Deputy Premier Rumored Slain

Prague Spokesman Describes Reports as Fantastic

Prague, March 24 (AP)— A government spokesman described as fantastic today reports published abroad that Deputy Premier Zdenek Fierlinger had been assassinated by Czech underground fighters and that the communist party secretary-general, Rudolf Slansky, had been wounded.

This spokesman said he has relayed the reports to other government officials, adding:

"They were greeted with roars of laughter."

Ottawa (CP)— The Ottawa Evening Citizen today quoted Frantisec Nemec, former Czech Minister to Canada, as saying he has received "definite word" from behind the iron curtain of the assassination of Zdenek Fierlinger, Deputy Prime Minister of Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Nemec, who left his post at the Czech Embassy to remain in Canada after the coup which put Slansky, Communist party secretary in Czechoslovakia, had been seriously wounded.

He told the Citizen he was satisfied his information was authentic but that he had no details except that the men were both shot at the same time.

Fierlinger, who was known as a leading figure in the pre-war drive over to the Communists at the end of the war, was one of the official Democratic party which he led, served as Czech Ambassador to Moscow and as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

"He knew everything," the former Ambassador added. "Perhaps he knew too much."

Slansky, who was also in Moscow during the war, was regarded generally as one of the most important men in Czechoslovakia because of his close ties with the Kremlin.

Mr. Nemec said his information was "sketchy" but "quite accurate" and that he had "good sources of information."

Escaped Prisoners Found in Attic

Timmins, March 24 — (CP) — Two prisoners who escaped Thursday from Monteith industrial farm, 40 miles from here, today were found hiding in the attic of a building in the village of Porquis Junction.

Ward St. Amour, 23 and Leonard A. Smart, 26, were quickly brought back to the farm. They were picked up after a Monteith garage operator reported hearing noises in his attic.

They were said to have made the 20-mile trip to Porquis and back. Prison farm officials and provincial police spent the night scouring the countryside.

St. Amour and Smart, both from the North Bay area, are facing charges of escaping custody this week from Iroquois Falls, police said.

SUNDAY SPORT VOTE CUTS ACROSS PARTY LINES

Toronto, March 24 — (CP) — After lengthy debate in which legality of the measure was attacked and defended, the Ontario legislature late Thursday night gave second reading by 56 to 20 to the government bill permitting commercial sports on Sundays in municipalities which have approved it by a local vote.

The division was several members crossing party lines. A. W. Downer (PC—Dufferin-Simcoe) supported the measure, while among supporters were some CCF opposition members and both Labor-Progressives.

Premier Frost said that the government's legal officers were in no doubt about the validity of the bill, and in this connection he said that municipal government is a part of provincial government. As it stood the bill became law when given royal assent. If, instead, it was referred to the committee the government would have a chance to get the opinion of the courts on its validity before it went into effect.

Toronto and Windsor have already approved Sunday sports by local votes, Frost said, and told the legislature that Toronto's vote was "overwhelmingly approved of public opinion." Many persons might ask the cause for the opinion in Toronto and Windsor.

$200 DAMAGE CAUSED IN TRANSPORT CRASH

When two monsters of the highway meet it seems in some instances that there is just not room on the highway.

At least that was the indication yesterday when a Carwill transport and an RCAF float loaded with bulldozer were in a minor sideswipe collision on Dundas St., near Holden St.

As the two vehicles passed on the street the front corner of the bulldozer stripped the side of the Carwill van breaking through the metal at the rear and smashing the uprights. But the driver of the RCAF float was unaware of the incident and continued on his way. He was overtaken by police three miles south of the city. Damage of about $200 was caused the Carwill transport.

Cases Enlarged Until April 11

Represented in court by counsel seventeen local residents, charged with keeping gaming houses today in city magistrate's court had their cases enlarged to April 11.

Charges against the local men were laid more days ago following a visit to the city by the O.P.P. morality squad from Toronto. It was reported that in nine local places of business pin ball machines had been found in operation with the owner paying off customers for "free" games. The proprietor of one business establishment was charged with booking.

Otherwise the morning court session before Magistrate T. Y. Wills was comparatively brief with a number of traffic cases, including charges for left hand turns, "stop" streets, speeding and other offences being settled out of court.

One drunk was sentenced to ten days in jail in lieu of the customary fine of $10 and costs.

Would-be Doctor Assaulted Girls

A medical supplies salesman who posed as a doctor and "examined" two teen-age girls, Rudolph St. Saure, 40, of Desoronto, was fined $150 or 30 days in jail yesterday for indecent assault. Magistrate Denison of Toronto said the girls had been submitted to considerable humiliation.

Morality officers said Saure carried a doctor's bag with medical instruments and gave out cards inscribed Dr. Rudy H. Sauer, M.D. Sauer, who served four years in the navy as a sick bay attendant, said he always wanted to be a doctor.

One of Saure's cards was given by a King St. restaurant employee in a girl seeking employment. The girl was "examined" by the "doctor" at her Marion St. home. A second girl was applied for the same job became suspicious of Saure and notified the Ontario Medical Association. Saure's arrest followed.

Game and Fish Association Members See in Pictures Lessons of Conservation

Under the supervision of Mr. Charles W. Hill, Public Relations Officer for the Department of Lands and Forests for Ontario a program of four moving picture shots, entertained more than 125 members and guests at the meeting of the Belleville Game and Fish Association last night at the Kiwanis centre.

The "cine"-program amounted to over two hours of education in the preservation of wildlife and the forests where birds and animals make their homes. A short, entitled "Clear Water", stressed the importance of sewage disposal plants in keeping the waters about towns and cities free of pollution. It showed the ill effects poisonous water can have on fish, and water fowl. It compared waterfronts rife with pollution and sewage to those in shorelines with pure water washing over them, very refreshing to watch the latter scenes.

In Natural Habitat

Lovers of bird life were pleased with a Hollywood short in technicolor featuring the various species of ducks and geese in their natural habitat. Shots of the Canada goose in flight depicted the majestic beauty of this great bird as it winged its way effortless exertion that propelled it through the air. The rapid flight of the pintail duck was caught by the camera. The manner in which ducks take off from water was clearly exposed from every angle. Much credit is due the cameramen who made this film.

Following the "cine" program with President J. H. Legate in the chair the meeting took part in various discussions concerning conservation. Several suggestions were made but none was decided on.

Secretary J. Shortt read a list of recent contributions made through the efforts of the Game and Fish officers indicating that the department is on the heels of all offenders of laws with respect to conservation and protection of wildlife.

"That this council accept with regret the resignation of H. D. Bateman as one of our representatives on the Board of Governors of the Belleville General Hospital and views with alarm the reasons to appointed leading up to his resignation and that a special committee of council be appointed to investigate the entire hospital situation.

Buyer of Car Finds Vehicle Being Repossessed

It wasn't what could be called a late model car but the motorist was happy with his recent purchase in that it provided needed transportation. Among other things the car would come in handy for taking the groceries home.

So the other day he drove the car down town; parked it on Front Street and proceeded to purchase his week's groceries. Then, his arms laden with parcels he emerged from the store to put them in the car.

But was he due for a surprise! When he arrived at his car employees of a local tire store had stripped the car of its tires and were in the trunk busy as a finance company was waiting to take possession.

The unhappy motorist had purchased the car in good faith but apparently the previous owner had sold it without the formality of settling with the finance company. He had just continued to pay for a new set of tires, it is said.

The police are now looking for the original owner.

Legislation Will Be Applicable To All Services

Ottawa, March 24 (CP)—Defence Minister Claxton Thursday night told critics in the Commons a resolution to a bill aimed at modernizing and consolidating in one statute all legislation respecting big department and the Canadian Armed Forces.

The legislation is the same as that introduced and passed by the Senate at the last session. Mr. Claxton began reading a lengthy explanation of legislation, but as a result of a series of interruptions he did not complete his statement. He plans to do so today.

In introducing the measure before the Senate last year, Mr. Claxton said the 231-clause act will establish one piece of legislation applicable to all three services.

The provisions, subject to two new words, are similar in main points:

1. To include in one statute all existing legislation relating to the Defence Department and the Canadian forces.

2. To provide a single code of service discipline making soldiers, sailors and airmen subject to the same law.

3. To make all legislation applicable to service personnel Canadian legislation. Previously the army and air forces were regulated by the army and air force acts of the United Kingdom.

4. To provide for right of appeal from the finding and sentences of courts-martial and for a new trial on the discovery of new evidence.

5. To authorize use of active and reserve forces to meet a national disaster, such as a flood.

The bill would also make service offences uniform and make transaction of routine business more efficient and "expeditious."

Vanished Logger's Fate Still Mystery

Victoria, B.C., March 24 (CP)—The notation—"disappeared under peculiar circumstances" appears in the police file on Wil liam Romanuk, who vanished more than a year ago.

Interest in Romanuk's disappearance was renewed Thursday when the Victoria Daily Times said it had learned police had evidence that the missing man might have run afoul of political enemies."

But city police and the RCMP both of whom have been called into the case, declined to comment on the probable fate of the 47-year-old logger.

The Times said in a newspaper story that a suitcase in Romanuk's room contained communist literature and membership cards. These articles were turned over to the RCMP.

Also, the newspaper said, Romanuk had been seen with "mysterious" men the day he disappeared—March 19, 1949.

This report came from John Berandich, a cousin of the missing man.

Romanuk's account at a city bank is being watched by police.

The account still contains $250 in cash and $500 in bonds.

Says Prospectors Find Gold Mines, Not Governments

Kirkland Lake, March 24 — (CP) — R. A. Bryce, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, believes continued government interference and meddling on business will defeat their own purpose.

In a speech Thursday night to the Board of Trade in this Northern Ontario gold-mining centre, he departed from his prepared text to discuss their effect on the mining industry.

"We are surrounded by inspectors and committees who do everything except find gold mines," he said.

"It takes prospectors to find gold mines, not governments. Mines are financed by risk capital not by governments. With present government controls it is not possible to find new gold mines."

Critical of the government's price-fixing program also, he argued that other businesses are permitted to increase prices as production costs increase.

"Yet the cost of producing gold has increased as much as 70 per cent during recent years and the miner has been forced to bear forced to absorb these increases."

Mr. Bryce said his association is not opposed to the social security services provided by the government.

"But if you look for security you surrender your liberty. You can't have both. Government-sponsored security means controls —and controls mean more controls.

"Under our system of private enterprise we have given ourselves the finest standard of living in the world."

Galt, March 24—(CP) — City Council, meeting as the finance committee Thursday night, set a mill rate of 28.5 for 1950 — the lowest rate since 1915. It resulted from a reassessment of the city, made last year when the mill was 30, and a slashing of estimates.
